BATTLING THE RING.

The Committee of Seventy to Take Bold Action.

Important Address to the People of the State.

What They Propose to do in the Matter of the Frauds.

The Case of Mrs. Hagerty Before Justice Ledwith.

Discharge of the Prisoner on $5,000 Bail.

Present Attitude of Tweed, Hall and Sweeny.

It was currently reported by the Rangers on strolled into City Hall and County Court-house, yesterday, that the Committee of Seventy had never been more in earnest than it had a few days ago. On Thursday morning it is stated that the members of the Board of Apportionment were mostly in convention, and their resignations would have been received but for the settled contempt of Mr. PETER B. SWEENY. It is also stated, on pretty good authority that on Friday, after a long conference together, HALL, TWEED and SWEENY finally determined to disregard the protests of Mr. TILDEN, Mr. ROOSEVELT and the honest Democrats of the State, and to recklessly defy public opinion. Their friends now assert that they will not only refuse to resign, but will use all the resources in their power to retain their places and retain their position among the great leaders of their former allegiance. At last what is stated in the TIMES, the facts already known concerning the frauds upon the City Treasury and the robberies of the Assistant throw a strong suspicion upon HALL, SWEENY and TWEED, but more particularly upon TWEED, and there is a loud cry for their arrest upon these charges. TWEED's followers declare that there is no prison in the State that can hold Mr. TWEED an hour, and no Justice would be fearless enough to commit him, such they, in the most determined and threatening manner, the gentlemen who have the management of the Reform movement to do their worst. The examination of HAGERTY and BALCH is still the absorbing topic of conversation, and the almost invariable question is, WHO prompted HAGERTY to commit the theft? and the reply as invariably points to one man, though it has been pretty well ascertained that the two remaining members of the Ring are equally as culpable. The man HALCH, it is stated, is a very eccentric person, and would do anything that HAGERTY told him; still, if either of the prisoners make any disclosures, it is believed that HALCH will be the man, as he is very largely entirely dependent upon him, and the prospect of a cell in the State Prison is doubly repulsive to him. The wife of HAGERTY, at the request of the District-Attorney and the consent of Mr. BALCH, the counsel for Controller CONNOLLY, it will be seen, was yesterday discharged from custody by Justice LEDWITH on $5,000 bail, one JAMES RYAN becoming her surety. A spirit of impatience is still manifest in the community at what they call the tardiness of the Reform Committee, and strong expression of dissatisfaction was heard that the miserable subordinates HAGERTY and BAILCH, are the only parties who have been arrested. Yet the Committee of Seventy, which met yesterday, assert that their work is progressing as expeditiously as could possibly be expected under the circumstances, and promise that in a few days events will transpire that will both startle and gratify all good citizens.

THE COMMITTEE OF SEVENTY.

Important Meeting Yesterday—Committee on Law and Legislation Instructed—Appeal to the People—Speedy Action Promised.

The Committee of Seventy had a very full session yesterday afternoon in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. HENRY G. STEBBINS presided, assisted by the Vice-President, Hon. WILLIAM F. HAVEMEYER, with Mr. ROSWELL D. HATCH, as secretary. Soon after the meeting was called to order several members alluded to the matter of importance that were heard among the community, and said that it tended to show that the people were burning in earnest now, and would not be trampled with. In reply it was stated that the work was going bravely on, and promised the most complete success. Precipitate action, they said, might spoil everything. There is a crafty foe to be attacked, said a very eloquent gentleman, and he is well supplied with the best of all munitions of war in a full exchequer. The Ring is more extensive than is generally known, and includes not only the worthy trio, HALL, TWEED, and SWEENY, but extends its influence over the bench, the bar, the workshop, and the mercantile community. All, they say, are interested in screening its fraudulent transactions, and will spare neither money nor influence to hide their guilt. The Committee must of necessity proceed cautiously, taking care to make no failure. A few days more and they positively promise that they will be ready for an aggressive action as even the most impatient may desire. After a brief discussion, the following Committees were appointed:

On Law, and with the especial object in view of selecting able counsel to represent the Committee of Seventy—Messrs. Jackson S. Schultz, Isaac H. Bailey and William M. Fleiss.

On Legislation—Ex-Gov. Salomon, Ex-Judge James Emott, Hon. G. C. Barrett, W. Sherman, E. N. Bogt, Samuel B. Ruggles, Simon Stern, Hon. R. B. Roosevelt, Gen. John A. Dix, Hon. Edwards Pierrepont, Hon. William F. Havemeyer, H. G. Stebbins and Roswell D. Hatch, the three last-named being members ex-officio.

The following address of the Committee of Seventy was prepared by a Special Committee, of which Major J. M. Bruce was Chairman, and was adopted yesterday afternoon by the former Committee, as an appeal to the people of this State:

On the 4th of this month the people of the City of New-York assembled at Cooper Institute to give expression to the almost universal indignation that has been growing daily deeper against corrupt municipal officials. As this expression was deliberate and not unanimedic, it was not complicated by the proceedings of the most earnest and enthusiastic meeting held in this City since 1861. Our best citizens, of both parties, felt that the hour had come when all lawful means must be used to redeem the City from plunderers and to restore her drooping credit. As the most effectual method of carrying out their purpose, a Committee of Seventy was appointed, which, now, as part of its work, addresses the people of this State, and calls upon them to do their share toward effecting a thorough and complete reform.

What we have done here is known through the public Press. What may and should be done elsewhere we propose to suggest, and from the standpoint of the wholly non-partisan movement which we represent. And, at the outset, we must say that from the time of our appointment to the present this Committee has not misrepresented the sentiment of the meeting which called it into being.

Some of the members of this Committee have been known by reputation to every intelligent voter of this State for many years, and their words will not be doubted when they say—we do all the Committee—that they have in all their deliberations faithfully represented the non-partisan spirit of the great body of citizens who conferred on them the high honor of serving as their spokesmen and agents. Not one word has been uttered in our most confidential intercourse that could be construed into proof of the slightest desire to use the power of this Committee for any partisan end. We should have been not only false to a most sacred trust, but untrue to the inspiration that has daily come to us in the earnest support of both Democrats and Republicans, had we failed to realize the nature of the righteous revolution which has brought us to the front.

We have not an ill-will, but have given all the aid in our power to the honest members of the party which is dominant here, and which is peculiarly humiliated by scoundrels who have misused an honored party name as a cover for their villainies.

We appeal to citizens both of parties to save us and the State from the possibility of another such degradation as has fallen on all of us, from Maspeth Point to the westernmost and northernmost corners of New-York. It lies easily in your power to re-assert the honest manhood that ought to prevail in both parties, that no weak Legislature as those of the last few years will be possible during the rest of this century. No private business, no partisan zeal, can be so important to any right-minded citizen as the plain duties that are thrown on him by recent deplorable revelations. Until nominations for the Legislature cannot succeed, and are not likely to be made, in any district where honest men are alive and aware to the issues of this campaign. The money that has been accumulated from the spoils of the Metropolis will be poured out like water to procure the election of purchasable legislators, but it will be spent in vain wherever the people are aroused by a few earnest leaders. All the wealth of our City would not bribe a thoroughly awakened people or divert them from their purpose. Whether aroused by the menace that is bold and armed, or by the mean and feeble treason that makes the ballot a tame, law and instrument of fraud and Courts of justice a snare, the people are equal to the demand, and their loyalty and bravery are sure to conquer.

A free and active and prosperous people like ours will endure many evils in their government, but there is no power on earth that is so irresistible or so fatal to wrong-doers as the public opinion which is sure to be roused by successive and growing enormities.

The moral tone of our City is no higher than its neighbors. When the people are apathetic and demoralized and selfish schemers make a business of politics, there is no force to sustain our officials above the low level of indifference and low morals. But the moral power of ten relatively righteous men in every Assembly district would so raise the tone of local politics that no bad man could get his head high enough above the surface to command the support of either party.

Official corruption has grown up as the result of the needlessly enormous expenses of a gigantic war, of an inflated currency, of the magnificent chances offered to private ambitions, of stock and gold gambling, and a universally spread madness for sudden wealth and idle display. It is an evil which has affected both parties, and dragged them down from the high principles that gave them origin. Honest and earnest patriots will find the common ways and associations that have been brought on us by the representatives of both parties, and will be astonished to a doubly bitter hatred of the schemes that are in their own camp, and that have dragged their own banners in the mire of corruption.

In this City, where one political party has had unchecked rule for so many years, and where millions could be stolen from the tax-payers without imposing extra burdens that were felt as onerous by so wealthy a constituency, it is not strange that prevailing corruption should have broken out in aggravated forms, nor that all the evil elements in our community should have easily been combined into an apparently irresistible phalanx. No such mass of bad material was elsewhere to be found waiting such a masterly alliance of corrupt leaders to develop all its resources of evil. Ignorance furnished ready tools of a combination that included a political craft worthy of a departed Machiavelli, an adroitness of advocacy that was effective in spite of occasional buffooneries, a coarse brutality of power that awed and inspired rufflans and low natures, and a dare of cunning that was the exhilaration of the skill of the workmen. Given these elements, opportunities and leaders, and the natural result was the Ring which, until lately, has robbed and stolen itself into power, which has bought Legislatures, controlled Governors, corrupted newspapers, defied Courts of justice, violated the ballot-box, threatened all forms of civil and religious liberty, awed the timid rich, bribed the toiling masses, and cajoled respectable citizens, and which has finally grown to strong and reckless as to openly defy the intelligence and virtue which it believed to be inert, voiceless, and powerless to stay its aggressions or to assert the supremacy of honesty and justice.

But you of the country must help us. This is your City as truly as it is our own. We are your debtors and business agents. If we are overburdened with taxes, you have to pay us the more for doing your business. The corruption of our municipal government could not have grown to its present gigantic proportions had our leaders of the Ring not found active supports and willing material in bribable members of the Legislature elected by the rural districts. You must help us in our effort to purify our political life, and the one efficacious manner by which you can come to our relief is to elect honest men only to the next Legislature. If our City is disgraced by a Senator who domineers among weaker villains by mere grossness and magnitude of scoundrelism, he has found willing tools among the false representatives of districts where one year of its stealings would be regarded as enormous wealth.

There is no occasion for advice from this Committee as to the details of the great fight against all forms of official corruption which has made such shocking progress in this City. If the feeling which prevails among all our good citizens shall be shared by those who are further removed from the evils which at first appalled and then stung us into activity, earnest hearts will find ready means to incarnate honest purposes in noble actions, and to redeem the fair fame of our State for generations to come. We have tried to define the issue as it has pressed on us. If we have succeeded, and if you feel, as we do, that it is now the holiest manhood of the State that is on trial, no combination of political tricksters can repress or even direct the swelling tide of popular indignation and resolve. In its presence all ordinary political issues will sink out of sight, and next November will witness a vindication of the manhood of the people of New-York, as proud and momentous in its consequences as that which was attested when the State rose as one man at the call of a different form of patriotism.

The cause of self-government is deeply involved in this campaign. Of what use was it for tens of thousands of our best and bravest to lay down their lives on distant fields, if our Governments—municipal, State and national—are to fall into the hands of tricksters and thieves. Where is the demoralization to end that has made such appalling progress in the City of New-York? Will even the local Governments of the intelligent long withstand the inroads of corruption, when weak and bad men see it glittering with diamonds, revelling in private palaces, gaudy in equipages, and the mistress of the means of luxurious vice, in the Metropolis of the State? How long will it be safe for you to intrust your business to a community that you will not help to rid of thieves, and whose successful villainy sets dangerous examples to men of easy consciences, infirm purpose, and eager ambition? When the confidence that underlies all profitable human intercourse is sapped in so far as concerns the relations between rulers and ruled among a quarter of the population of the State, where and how in the process of decay and disease to stop? What other relations of trust between man and man will be long held sacred?

We appeal especially to the vast reserve force of voters, through whose criminal indifference to their political duties the shame and disgrace that we are now enduring has come upon us. At least one-third of the best classes of our people are habitually absent from the polls. The forces of evil are active, crafty and resolute. They are already visible all over the State, in the shape of combinations to purchase votes for the Ring with offers of local benefits. We believe that the temper of the people is such that it will render all these schemes futile and disastrous to their authors. The honest people of this State have never before had such inspiration to redeem themselves from all the wiles of corruptionists and to teach them a lesson that will be remembered for generations to come. Never has the proud motto of our State been more appropriate than it will be if we do our duty this Fall. In our glorious resurrection of public virtue, the humiliations of the past will be forgotten as a hateful dream, and every institution of our society and politics will feel the elevating influences of renewed confidence in honesty and justice.

THE CASE OF MRS. HAGERTY.

Judge Barrett Raises an Explanation—His Efforts to Detain the Prisoner Abortive—Mrs. Hagerty Released on Bail.

Early yesterday morning Essex Market Police Court was completely taken possession of by a large concourse of people in expectation of a lively scene in connection with the examination of Mrs. HAGERTY, which it was supposed would take place as soon as Judge LEDWITH took his seat on the Bench. The proceedings of the previous day before Judge DOWLING, instead of appearing the interest in the proceedings, appeared to have intensified it, and a greater earnestness was displayed in the discussion of the prospect than had characterized the former examination. Judge LEDWITH entered Court precisely at 10 o'clock, and immediately afterward Ex-Judge GEO. C. BARRETT, who represents the Committee of Seventy in the case, put in an appearance, and occupied a seat on the bench. The general interest increased with his advent, but without more than the usual exchange of courtesies, Judge LEDWITH proceeded to dispose of the ordinary Court calendar. The time passed, but neither Ex-Judge GARVIN, the District-Attorney, nor Mr. GRAHAM, the counsel for the prisoner, put in an appearance, and gradually it became understood among the audience that the case would not go on that day. The expression used by Mr. GRAHAM on Friday, that the prisoner, Mrs. HAGERTY, could not be responsible for the acts of her husband, seemed to favor this theory, and imperceptibly the crowd of spectators decreased. Judge BARRETT occupied a seat on the bench until 1½, when, finding no possibility of the arrival of the counsel engaged in the case, Judge LEDWITH said: I don't think there will be any examination in this Hagerty case to-day, as none of the counsel have yet put in an appearance.

Judge BARRETT—On that intimation of your Honor, I beg to refer. I wish, however, to correct a statement which appeared in some of the daily journals this morning to the effect that in a consultation with District-Attorney GARVIN and JOHN GRAHAM, I had consented to the discharge of Mrs. HAGERTY. That is entirely inaccurate. We have had no such consultation, and so far from consenting to the discharge of the prisoner, I cannot conceive on what earthly basis an application of that character could be made, from the fact that the affidavits upon which the warrant was issued are as yet entirely uncontradicted, and show a perfectly clear, plain case against her. I ought to add that, so far from having consented to her discharge, I have not been in communication with the counsel for the prisoner or for the prosecution. I attended the Court yesterday before Justice DOWLING, and remained a very brief time. I remained quite long enough to hear the body of which I am a member spoken of in very violent terms, without having an opportunity of replying to the learned counsel who made the attack. I was prevented by the District-Attorney from participating in the discussion, as he was not desirous that any counsel should speak in conjunction with himself. I had heard the learned counsel for the defendant making a violent attack on the body I represented, and also upon your Honor and many other good citizens, and after hearing Mr. GARVIN's reply, in which he did not consider it his duty to call any bodies of these observations, and did not in any wise defend those who had been assailed, and the learned gentleman being permitted to pursue this course of conduct without my being afforded any opportunity to reply in consequence of the action of the District-Attorney, I felt it was no place for me. His language was distasteful to me, and I left the Court at a very early stage of the proceedings. I held no consultation with any one on the subject; and I therefore again observe that these are the exact facts, and that I never, under any circumstances, consented to the discharge of Mrs. HAGERTY. On the contrary, it seems to me inconceivable that such a suggestion could be made as that she should be discharged, upon the facts in the affidavits, which are clear and explicit, and there is no attempt to introduce any evidence in her defense. I came here this morning in regard to the statement relating to her discharge, and also to ascertain what was to be done in the case. As you have suggested that there is no appearance of counsel in the matter, I don't see there is anything for me to do but retire, leaving the case in the hands of the District-Attorney and your Honor, in your judicial capacity, and I have no doubt that justice will be done to all parties.

Judge BARRETT then left, and the Court took a recess until 2 o'clock. In the meantime none of the parties arrived in Court, though a communication had been addressed to the District-Attorney's office in regard to the case. After waiting until 4½—half an hour after the usual time of adjournment—Judge LEDWITH, addressing one of the officers of the Court, said:

Mr. WILKIN, (an officer of the Court,) will you tell the keeper to allow Mrs. HAGERTY to come in?

After the lapse of a few minutes, Mrs. HAGERTY was brought into Court. She was dressed plainly and modestly, and appeared calm and collected during the proceedings. Occasionally her features relaxed into a smile, clearly expressing her complete indifference as to the result of the investigation.

Judge LEDWITH—I have received a communication from the District-Attorney, in which he says that from the examination made yesterday he is satisfied that you should be discharged. Before me you were held on certain affidavits which at the time I deemed to be sufficient to warrant your arrest, and which have not been contradicted. I addressed a letter to the District-Attorney in regard to the matter, and received a verbal communication from him, stating he would send the proofs in support of his opinion with a note. I have waited for these proofs, but up to this hour have not received them, and therefore as I desire to respect the views of the District-Attorney, I will take your bail, and if I receive the papers from the District-Attorney which he promised, it may, perhaps, result in your discharge. Until the papers are sent to me, I do not feel warranted in directing your discharge. If you are prepared to give bail I will now accept it.

The prisoner mentioned the name of Mr. MORGAN JONES as her surety.

The Judge stated he desired to accommodate the prisoner if it were possible.

PRISONER—I will send for Mr. JONES.

Judge LEDWITH—Mr. OWENS, your lawyer, says he desires you may be either committed or discharged, but he is anxious that the matter may be immediately disposed of. I would prefer to hear from the District-Attorney before coming to the final conclusion; but as your attorney desires to have the matter closed to-day, I shall have to commit you, should your bail not be offered to-day. Possibly I may have these proofs this afternoon, but in the meantime you had better send for your bail.

The prisoner then sent a message for Mr. JONES, but over an hour elapsed and the effort to secure his presence proved unavailing. Messages were then dispatched for other bail, and in a short time Mr. JAMES RYAN, of No. 120 Henry-street, was found to go her surety in $5,000. The prisoner, when asked in the usual formal manner, whether she was guilty or not guilty, replied: "I know nothing about it." She was then discharged from custody.

The following is the correspondence that passed between Judge LEDWITH and Messrs. GARVIN and BRADY, in relation to her discharge:

PEOPLE VS. MRS. HAGERTY.

DISTRICT-ATTORNEY'S OFFICE, }
CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW-YORK, } ss.
Sept. 22, 1871.

MY DEAR SIR: From the examination this day made I am satisfied Mrs. HAGERTY should be discharged. YOURS, &c.,

SAMUEL B. GARVIN, District-Attorney.

THOMAS A. LEDWITH, Police Justice.

PEOPLE VS. MRS. HAGERTY.—MY DEAR SIR: On behalf of Mr. CONNOLLY, and on his request, I beg leave to unite with the District-Attorney in advising the discharge of Mrs. HAGERTY.

Respectfully yours,

T. A. LEDWITH, Police Justice.

JUDGE LEDWITH'S REPLY.

SEPT. 23, 1871.

THE PEOPLE VS. MRS. HAGERTY.—MY DEAR SIR: In your communication of the 22d inst., you say: "From examination this day I am satisfied Mrs. HAGERTY should be discharged." Would it not be necessary in order to justify my discharge of Mrs. HAGERTY, that the proofs upon which that suggestion is based should become a part of my record, explaining or contravening, as it no doubt does in some material respects, the proofs now before me? Awaiting your reply, I am, yours truly,

THOMAS A. LEDWITH, Police Justice.

S. B. GARVIN, District-Attorney.

Deputy Controller Quinn Not Recognized by the Mayor.

Notwithstanding the counsel of Mr. O'GORMAN to Mayor HALL, there has not been so far any revocation of his letter, wherein he warns the heads of Departments against holding official communication with Mr. CONNOLLY'S appointee to the Deputy Controllership. In conversation with the head of one of the Departments yesterday Mayor HALL positively stated that if Mr. GRAHAM were to send any letter to him he would not take cognizance of it. In answer to those who speak of the Mayor resigning, that official caused a placard to be put in a conspicuous place in the City Hall, yesterday, bearing the following inscription:

"Elected 1st of January, 1871, for two years ending 1st of December, 1872. What is my answer?"

The City Hall.

The City Hall and new Court-house were inspected yesterday. A few contractors came to the Finance Department to ascertain what probability there was of their bills being paid, and were informed that until the injunction was dissolved no claims could be settled. The Mayor came to the office early and left about 1 o'clock. All the Departments were closed as an early hour.

The Teachers' Salaries.

The amount due the teachers in the public schools is one month's salary, and is equivalent to $100,000. They were all paid on the 1st of August in full. The requisition upon the Controller called for $200,000 to meet the current expenses and salaries of the whole Board. It is asserted that Mr. GRAHAM will use his utmost endeavors to have the amount necessary to pay the teachers assigned to the Board of Education as an early day. The Board of Education are to meet next Thursday, when another requisition will be made on the Controller. In the meantime the following notice has been posted in the anteroom of the Department of Public Instruction:

The salaries of teachers will not be paid today, owing to the legal restraint placed upon this Department on account of the litigation now pending in the Supreme Court, in the matter of the injunction against the Board of Apportionment of the City. It is probable, however, that the salaries will be paid in a few days, of which due notice will be given.

LAWRENCE D. KIERNAN,
Clerk of the Board.

The Committee of Seventy Indorsed—Action of Members of the Eighteenth Ward.

At a large meeting of the Germans of the Sixteenth Ward, held on Friday evening, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the German-American Reform Association of the Eighteenth Ward, in full accordance with the principles laid down by the Committee of Seventy, in their late authority on organization of the City, pledge themselves to support the nominations made by the Committee of Seventy, and that they request the members of the Committee to call a meeting of the Association as soon as an organization.

Resolved, That the Association deems a mass meeting of all citizens of German descent, to be called without delay, the best means to give expression to the almost unanimous conviction of the Germans that

DEMOCRATIC REFORM.

The Anti-Tammany Movement—Meeting Appointed to be Conducted in the Various Wards.

A meeting of the Democratic Reform Association was held last evening at Apollo Hall, Mr. SAMUEL G. COURTNEY presiding. There was a very full attendance of delegates from the different Wards present.

Mr. ROBERT B. ROONEY moved that a committee of five be appointed to prepare an address to the Democratic electors of this City, and to all who feel interested in this reform movement, for the purpose of inviting an expression of the views of all citizens opposed to Tammany Hall, to be published in the daily Press on Monday, in connection with a call for a primary election to be issued on the same day. A discussion took place on the subject, which ended in the appointment of the following Committee: Wm. C. Barrett, Abraham R. Lawrence, Max. Gosyn, Benjamin Wood and Wm. E. Wickham.

A motion, put by Mr. THOMAS J. MCCARTHY, to the effect that the Association be called the Democratic Reform Association, was unanimously approved of. The matter was referred to a committee for confirmation.

Mr. ROBERT B. ROONEY moved that the Committee be empowered to issue a call for a primary meeting for selection of the Committees, to be held in each Ward in the City, and consisting of three delegates from each election district, and that the names of the respective delegations be nominated by the Committee, such names to be handed in by the members present from the Wards they represent.

Mr. MITCHELL thought that one member from each electoral district would be sufficient. It would be a difficult thing to get three respectable gentlemen from each electoral district in the City.

Ex-Sheriff O'BRIEN was of opinion that they should have three. Tammany was powerful and would work hard to try and seize these men. Out of three they would be sure to have at least one upright, honest man upon whom they could rely.

Mr. W. C. BARRETT, by special request of the Chair, rose and said he differed with the opinion of Mr. MITCHELL. He was in favor of the views of the gentlemen at the other side. The arguments of Mr. O'BRIEN and Mr. MOONEY were extremely forcible, and instead of having three men to represent each election district, he would be for having ten. Applause.] And these men, he would draw in hearn, and opposed to the villainy which had disgraced the Democratic Party, aye, he would go for having the men of indomitable nerve, and will who would see that the rights of the Democratic Party were protected.

Mr. MITCHELL said he merely suggested one name for the purpose of argument, and withdrew his motion in favor of the original proposition.

After a long discussion, Mr. MOONEY's motion, that the number of delegates to compose the General Committee should consist of three gentlemen from each district, at least one to be a German, was unanimously adopted.

On motion, it was agreed that three inspectors of election from each Ward be appointed, whose duty it would be to consult with the views of the Committee in selecting three delegates from each election district.

The meeting took a recess for fifteen minutes for the purpose of selecting these inspectors. After recess, Mr. BRENNAN stated that a list of several inspectors had been handed to him from various Wards, and as several of the Wards had been unrepresented he would not make an appointment. He would have all the Wards represented here on Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock for the purpose of appointing three inspectors from each. The suggestion was unanimously approved of.

On the motion of Mr. MOONEY it was resolved that the primary meetings be held next Wednesday evening between 8 and 9 o'clock. The meeting then adjourned.

MARINE DISASTERS.

Reported Destruction by Fire of the Steam-Ship Lafayette at Havre.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—The General Transatlantic Company's steam-ship Lafayette, Capt. ROUSSAU, which had just arrived at Havre, from New-York, was burned, with her cargo, at the former port yesterday.

Mr. MACKENZIE, agent of the General Transatlantic Steam-ship Company, was not to receipt of any information yesterday afternoon in regard to the burning of the steamer Lafayette at Havre. The truth of the report was confirmed, however, by a private dispatch received in this City yesterday afternoon by C. LEMAIRE & CO., of No. 4 South William-street, who shipped 600 tons of wheat by the ill-fated vessel. The dispatch gives no particulars of the conflagration, but simply states the fact that the steamer and her cargo had been destroyed by fire.]

Vessels Wrecked Off Cape Race, Lower Quitteras and Nova Scotia.

The Captain of the ship Carrie Reed, from Liverpool, at San Francisco, reports seeing the wreck of an iron ship in Good Success Bay, Terra del Fuego. There was a tent and a boat on the shore which had been recently abandoned. The wreck had a round stern; the topmasts were painted black and the lower masts white. Possibly it was the British steamer Sant Carres, (previously reported,) though the weather was so rough a landing could not be effected in order to ascertain further particulars.

The American three-masted schooner Samuel Pardee, which was repaired at Halifax, and left there a week ago for Galveston, bank of La Have. The crew were saved and taken to Shelburne.

The British ship Talavera, ashore in San Ramon Bay, Lower California, may be got off if the weather continues fair. A tug has been sent to her assistance from San Diego. Her Captain reports that he ran out of water and provisions, and was compelled by a mutinous crew to put in for supplies, and ran aground on a hard sand bar. Twelve of the crew deserted in a life-boat Aug. 28, and reached Rosario Sept. 5.

Large Legacies to Religious Societies.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 23.—The will of the late A. DEMPSTER of this city, whose wealth is supposed to have been several millions, was placed with the Surrogate this morning. He bequeaths one-half of all his real and personal property to the American Bible Society not being under the control or direction of the Baptist denomination. The remainder of his property, with the exception of $1,000, he bequeaths to the Presbyterian Society for Foreign Missions, under the control of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States. The $1,000 accepted he bequeaths to Mrs. SUSAN EDWARDS. The testament will be contested.

Two Thousand Warriors Reported on the War Path—The Railroad Surveying Party Turned Back—The Case of Big Tree and Santanta.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 23.—It is rumored here and in Duluth that the surveying party of the Northern Pacific Railroad have met with a large body of hostile Indians, who had accoutred them to turn back. The party were 50 rodsurveys at Fort Rice on the 6th. The escort consisted of seven companies of infantry, two of cavalry, a battery of dismounted guns and fifty scouts. A total of about 1,200 men. A Mr. BELKNAP, who is personally well with both Wadsworths, says there was no reason that Sumner Rice, with 1,000 Cavalry, was needed to dispose the right of the party to make the survey.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—The War Department has transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior, for his information, a copy of the correspondence between Gen. POPE and Frank HOLE, the Indian Superintendent, who came to the latter at Agent TATUM, detailing the return of the horses and mules stolen by the Kiowas, and stating that Kicking Bird and other Kiowa Chiefs have made a strong appeal for peace to the Indians of Sanborn and Big Tree. On receiving Gen. SHERMAN'S instructions, the correspondence was forwarded by him as follows:

"Respectfully submitted to Secretary of War to ascertain the wishes of the Interior Department in the case SANBORN ought to have been released, and I hope the War Department will not consent to his return to the Interior. As to Big Tree, I do not deem his case a proper one for civil trial. He should be kept a prisoner of war, subject to the action of the Congress of the United States rather than an act of Congress. He was then informed that he would be reported to the full Committee at its next meeting, when it is supposed Congress will take cognizance of the case and order his arrest for contempt. The two Subcommittees of the Kuklux Committee held meetings today. The Subcommittee for the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida resolved to meet at Augusta Oct. 16. GERMAN PROTEST AGAINST FRENCH ABUSES.

German Protest Against French Abuses—Removal of the Commercial Treaty Between France and England.

VERSAILLES, Sept. 23.—HERR VON ARNIM, the German representative near the Government of France, has filed with the Minister of Foreign Affairs a protest against the excesses committed by the French people of Lyons and the vicinity upon the Germans residents of that city and in its neighborhood, who, it is alleged, have been shamefully abused and maltreated. The protest is couched in the most energetic, though temperate, language, and calls, on behalf of the Emperor and people of Germany, for redress. The subject of the renewal of the Anglo-French Commercial Treaty of 1860 is under discussion by President THIERS and the British Ambassador, Lord LYONS.

Sentence of the Erie Railroad Contempt Prisoners—Imposition of Fines From North Carolina and Arkansas.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MILFORD, Penn., Sept. 23.—Judge DIMMICK has just sentenced WILLIAM CARROLL and THOMAS MARKHAM, upset brakes and stone throwers for obstructing the Erie Road, to pay $250 each, the costs of the court and five and a half years' solitary confinement in Philadelphia Penitentiary. The Judge delivered the sentence with great feeling. Strong men were in the court and the scene was very impressive. The boys received the sentence with apparent composure. The Judge said he would visit them in prison and watch their course.

KUKLUX COMMITTEE.

Failure of Witnesses from North Carolina to Appear—Examination of Those From South Carolina and Arkansas.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—The special Kuklux Investigating Committee met again to-day at the Capitol. P. H. SCUDDERNOT, of Gibsonboro, N. C.; DAVID GIST, of Union County, South Carolina, having been duly summoned and failed to appear as witnesses before the Committee, the Chairman, Senator SCOTT, was authorized to report the said fact to the Senate at the next session, and request the President of the Senate to issue his warrant for their arrest as being in contempt of the authority of Congress. It was also ordered that copies of this resolution be sent to the above-named parties by mail. The full Committee then adjourned to meet on the first day of the next session of Congress, or sooner, if called by the Chairman; after which the Subcommittee of three, namely, Senators SCOTT, POOL and BLAIR, appointed to examine witnesses, organized and examined Col. WM. L. SAUNDERS, of North Carolina, and EDWARD WHEELER, of Arkansas. SAUNDERS, whom the Committee have had much trouble in getting before them, refused to-day to answer all questions as to his connection, or the connection of any other person, with the so-called Kuklux organization, on the ground that he was not compelled to criminate himself or bring upon himself the punishment which, according to the decision of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, may be visited upon any one who shall give evidence for the prosecution of his fellow-members. The case of Congress of Jan. 24, 1857, was read to him, wherein it is stated that such plea shall not be held good to excuse a witness from testifying before a Congressional Committee, but he is still persistent in his refusal to answer. The question will be put to him anyone he preferred to rely on the Constitution of the United States rather than on an act of Congress. He was then informed that he would be reported to the full Committee at its next meeting, when it is supposed Congress will take cognizance of the case and order his arrest for contempt. The two Subcommittees of the Kuklux Committee held meetings today. The Subcommittee for the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida resolved to meet at Augusta Oct. 16. CURRENT LITERATURE.

THE BATTLE WITH THE RING.

It was a quarter evening—
Old Kasper's work was done,
And by his quiet cottage door
He sat him down to rest.

His only daughter, Gretchen fair,
Her spinning-wheel drew near,
And by her mother's knee she knelt
To say her evening prayer.

Then Kasper took the Holy Book,
Where printed stood in black and white
The words of life and hope,
And read them slowly through.

Now from the Child's bowed head
But silence rose.
Now from the Father's lips arose
The solemn voice of prayer.

Then Gretchen sang a holy hymn
Until the room was filled
With music soft and sweet,
That seemed to float away

Through the open window,
And on the night-wind rise
Up to the golden stars,
And to the ear of God.

Thus pass the peaceful hours
In cottage small and low,
While those who love abide
And kneel at night in prayer.

Then Kasper, Gretchen, Child and Wife
Lay down to sleep and rest,
Assured that He who watches all
Will guard them through the night.

While morning breaks again
The simple family
Will rise and thank the Lord
For his protecting care.

Soon the sweet Child
Will lisp the words of love
Taught her by Father dear
And Mother kind and good.

Thus dwelling in love,
Obeying God's command,
Blessed indeed are they
Whose home is happy so.

I AM sure I should, Amy," I replied, as I looked at her with admiration, "if you would only be as kind to me as you are to your flowers. Why, you have not given me a single rose since I have been here, and I am very fond of flowers."

"Am I?" she said, looking at me with a curious expression in her eyes. "I did not know that. I thought you cared for nothing but books and study."

"Indeed you are mistaken, Amy," I said, reproachfully. "I am very fond of flowers, and I am very fond of you, and I think you might have known it."

"Perhaps I might," she said, in a low voice, and then she was silent for a few minutes, busily engaged in arranging the flowers in the vase before her. I watched her graceful fingers as they moved among the delicate blossoms, and thought how much prettier they looked than the flowers themselves. Then I looked at her face, which was bent down, so that I could see only the long lashes that shaded her cheeks, and the soft, dark hair that fell in rich masses over her white forehead. I thought I had never seen her look so lovely before, and I wondered why I had not noticed it more. Then she looked up suddenly, and caught me in the act of gazing at her, and I felt myself blushing like a girl.

"Amy," I said, "I am very fond of you, and I think you might have known it without my telling you so. Why do you not like me?"

"Who could help liking you, Mr. Rodwell?" she said, in a low, constrained voice, and without looking at me. "You are very kind to me, and I am very grateful to you for your kindness."

"Then why do you not show it?" I said, reproachfully. "You are very cold and distant to me, Amy, and I do not like it. I thought we were friends, and I hoped that you would be glad to see me when I came to-day. I have been away for a week, and I thought you would miss me."

"I did miss you," she said, in a low voice, which trembled slightly, and I saw that her eyes were filled with tears.

"Then why do you not show it?" I said, eagerly. "Why do you not treat me as you used to do? Why do you not talk to me as you do to Mr. Armytage?"

"Mr. Armytage is very kind to me," she said, quietly. "He does not treat me as if I were a child, and he does not scold me for every trifle."

"Scold you!" I said, in surprise. "I never scolded you in my life, Amy. What do you mean?"

"Oh, you know what I mean," she said, impatiently. "You are always finding fault with me, and telling me that I am doing wrong. Mr. Armytage never does that. He is very kind to me, and I like him very much."

"Indeed!" I said, angrily. "I am glad to hear it. I am sorry that I have been so unfortunate as to displease you, Miss Kenyon. I will not trouble you with my presence any more. Mr. Armytage will be glad to hear that you like him very much, and he will be very happy to wait upon you. Perhaps you will like him better than you do me, and will marry him."

"Mr. Armytage has asked me to be his wife, and I have refused him," she said, in a low, trembling voice, and with her head bent down, so that I could not see her face.

"Then why do you not marry him?" I said, angrily. "He is rich, and can give you a home, and I cannot. Why do you not marry him, Amy?"

"Because I do not love him," she said, in a low, sad voice, which went to my heart, and made me ashamed of my anger.

"Then you love me, Amy?" I said, eagerly, and I took her hand in mine, and looked down into her face. "Tell me, my darling, that you love me, and I will be happy."

"I cannot tell you that," she said, in a low, constrained voice, and she withdrew her hand from mine, and turned away her head. "I cannot tell you that, Mr. Rodwell, for it is not true."

"Not true!" I said, in surprise. "Then you do not love me, Amy?"

"I have told you so," she said, in a low, trembling voice, and I saw that her eyes were filled with tears.

"Then why did you say that you loved me?" I said, angrily. "Why did you lead me to believe that you loved me, and why did you allow me to tell you that I loved you, if you did not love me in return?"

"I thought you loved me," she said, in a low, sad voice, which went to my heart, and made me ashamed of my anger. "I thought you loved me, and I was very happy. I am very sorry that I have been so unfortunate as to make a mistake, Mr. Rodwell, and I hope that you will forgive me for having done so."

"Forgive you, my darling!" I said, tenderly, and I took her hand in mine, and looked down into her face. "I have nothing to forgive, Amy, for I love you very dearly, and I am very happy to know that you love me in return. Look up, my darling, and tell me that you forgive me for my unkind words, and that you will be my wife."

"I cannot look up," she said, in a low, trembling voice, and I saw that her face was covered with blushes. "I cannot look up, Mr. Rodwell, and I cannot be your wife."

"Not look up, Amy!" I said, in surprise. "Why not, my darling? Why will you not look up, and why will you not be my wife?"

"Because I am not worthy," she said, in a low, sad voice, which went to my heart, and made me ashamed of my anger.

"Not worthy, Amy!" I said, in surprise. "Why do you say that you are not worthy? You are worthy of the best man in the world, my darling, and I am not worthy to be your husband. Look up, Amy, and tell me said: "Gentlemen, the hazards of war have brought you as masters into a house where, under other circumstances, I should have been glad to receive you as guests. I shall not importune you much with my presence while you are here, for my daughter and I will beg your permission to keep our own apartments, but the rest of the house will be yours. My steward has orders to take your pleasure, and will deliver you these keys. This particular key (and he threw one from his pocket) is that of a gallery of heirlooms. You will allow me, General, to remit its to you in person."—From "Fleur de Lys, a Story of the Late War," in the Cornhill Magazine for September.

MABEL'S STORY.

We lived far away in the country in a rustic district. My father was Postmaster of the little place, and kept a few groceries for sale. But he had enough to do to maintain his family scantily and clothe them decently. I was sixteen, and housekeeper; my mother was dead, and I was the eldest of us four children. The rest being younger, I strove to do my best for them.

My one great trouble then was my clothes. Other young girls of our station that I associated with dressed better than I could, and it grieved me. Vanity begins earlier than that in the female heart. I had made up and remade every article of my mother's wardrobe for the children or for me, had worked up every shred to the best advantage, and now that was all gone, and I did need a new dress for the coming Winter. I made my shoes last as long again as other girls did, for I knew my father needed every sixpence he could earn, and I dreaded wanting anything. Not that he ever was cross; but he often sighed, and looked so pained and sorrowful when I asked for money, that I tried to do with as little as possible.

But here it was the last of October; my Summer dresses, poor enough at all times, looked very thin and paltry now.

One Saturday afternoon I shall never forget. It is what I am going to tell of. My work all done, the children at play in the orchard, I combed out my long, brown hair, put on my best cotton frock, selected a plain white collar of my own making, and pinned it round my neck with a gay pin, the only bit of jewelry I had ever owned. With a little natural instinct to dress well. Not fine; only neat. Then, taking out my last Winter's best frock, I sat down by the window to see what I could do at renovating it. It was a light blue merino—very light indeed now—and I knew it was too short for me, as I was still growing, and was very shabby. But by turning and putting in a wide band of trimming which I had, I thought it might be made to answer, so I set to work with a will.

The work was vexing. I was trying to do what scarcely could be done; and as I sat sewing and contriving, I felt fit to cry over our poverty. Just then the dog on the doorsill set up a loud barking, and I looked to see what it was at. A man was coming in at the gate with a pack on his back: a travelling peddler, I knew. He smiled and came in, although I said I did not want anything; and the children, seeing him, came running in too.

"I cannot afford to buy; indeed I cannot," I kept saying. But the man only kept on coming, and opened his pack on the parlor floor. And it was too great a treat to me to see the things, to make great opposition.

The first that came out was just the very thing I had cast longed for—a beautiful fine French merino, of a dark, crimson color, and once seen a dress of this kind, but none had ever been offered for sale in our little place that could equal this in shade or texture.

The peddler looked at me with his keen eyes as I knelt down to feel the prize. I had no notion of winning it. "You lady will buy," he said; but I shook my head, and pushing my hands behind me, stood up resolutely, trying hard not to long for the much-desired piece of goods.

"No buy!" he exclaimed in a broken language of some sort. I could not tell whether German or French; and he looked so astonished, even pitiful, that I felt sorry at once, and confessed that I had no money, and could not purchase.

"But the beautiful young lady have some old silver—old jewelry—old silk dresses—just good as money?" said he.

I laughed at the idea, but he only opened another package to display to the boys some gaudy watches with very gay chains, and binding them on again, he took out a small doll's box and told it under my nose. "Last one I got over the sea," till mine bought her dress. I mentioned to the boys to stay near the door-step, and then taking up the much-coveted dress-piece, I again examined it. Satan was tempting me, or some vexatious spirit that does duty for him, and never had I been so sorely beset. How could I let it go yet how pay for it?

The black eyes never left my face, but the fellow was respectful, only bowing lower as he said, "You think it good?"

"Oh, yes!" I replied, "too good for me."

"Not so," he said. "It suits you much, and you shall have cheap."

"I tell you I have no money."

"No matter, I trust. You give me something to keep for you, and I come again," he said.

"But I have nothing," I insisted. Still he only seemed more eager; said something of hard times, of having to stay at the tavern, and expenses over Sunday, of being so very true—and I with the merino in my hand all the while.

Suddenly he stepped close to me, pointing to the door-breech I wore. I could give him that, he said: that is, lend it to him in trust until he came again. Did I think much of it, he asked.

I laughed as I undid it. I did not think much of it, but it was all the jewelry I possessed in the world. I showed him my name on the back, "Mabel." But it was worn nearly illegible now.

"Nearly quite," said he, turning it about in his hands. "It very poor."

And this was true; the poor thin gold, if it was gold, was quite dinted and mashed that the original pin came and a needle tied in by the eye with a thread served to fasten it. One large stone was set in the centre as large as a pea, surrounded by nine smaller ones, but one of these was lost out long ago, and I had often tried to find a piece of white glass to fit the small cavity, but had failed. The stones were all glass, as I believed. Some of the girls in the village would ask me why I wore the old-fashioned thing; and then I would show them the dim "Mabel" on the back, and tell them I had been named after the name there. Some one had given my mother the pin for me when I was born; and she mother, said I should bear the same name. The peddler kept it in his hand, and I noticed that his fingers trembled.

"I'll bring it you back in three months time," said he; "twon't be o' no good to me, but I'll take it on trust. Or, if you can pay sooner, I shall be about the neighborhood all next week, and shall sleep each night at the inn."

Be you very sure I did not hesitate long; the temptation was too great; so, thrusting the old pin carelessly into his breast pocket, he tied up his bundles, and with low bows left the house.

I could scarcely believe in my good luck. I spread out my new frock on the bed, and held it before me to try the effect. And then I began to repent. My father, I knew, would not give me one cross look; but still I did hate to tell him of the twelve shillings I owed the peddler. I would be so saving for the next three months, that he would lose nothing by my bargain, for I'd scrape it together myself.

When I picked up the linen band to put it round my neck, I did not know how to fasten it as first without that familiar old pin; then I recollected how often the girls had told me that a bow of ribbon would look so much prettier. So, looking up a small piece of black velvet, I formed a bow, and felt more than satisfied.

My father did not get home to tea or to supper. I put the children to bed after their slice of bread and treacle and a good washing.

At ten o'clock a note came, saying some business had detained my father; that I had better close the house and retire. This was nothing very unusual, as his business matters often kept him late. I was quite a staid little woman in management, and did as I was bid. My father would come in with his latch-key. On Sunday morning at breakfast the children showed him their watches and doll. I said nothing about the dress, for it struck me he was looking anxious.

"Where's your breast-pin, Mabel?" he asked, as the children ran out before the door after breakfast.

The breast-pin! I was frightened at once. He had never asked after it or noticed it before. He must have heard of what I'd done and was angry.

"Father, I have not got it!" I exclaimed at once, ready to cry.

"Not got it! What do you mean, child? You surely were it yesterday?"

"Yes, Sir." I replied, "and it's all safe. I was just going to tell you about it when you frightened me."

"Well, I don't wish to frighten you, my dear; I had no thought of such a thing. Calm yourself, Mabel, while I tell you of a letter I received yesterday, and then you can get the pin at your leisure. You can get it?"

"I can get it, father. Or, rather you can. But I hope you will not blame me. What have you heard about it?"

"Well, my dear, listen. We have never attached any value to that old pin, only that a good, kind woman gave it to your mother to keep for you, and so we did keep it because of that. She was a stranger to us, poor lady, and was in distress, and your mother was kind to her. But she left the place soon after you were born, and we never heard more of her. Yesterday, however, I got a letter from a long distance, asking about that very pin, and describing it, even to the name on the back. It is very valuable, Mabel."

My heart was beating ten strokes where it should have beat but one.

"The pin we have set no store by is of great value, Mabel. The centre diamond alone is worth what to us poor people would be a fortune. And it is all yours, my dear: you can convert the diamonds into money and be at ease for life."

What with the overpowering surprise and what with fear of my father's anger, I fainted. When I came to myself on the sofa in the parlor, the children were there, and it was too late to go to church. I felt bewildered, and trembled yet, but listened attentively to my father as he read the important letter from London. Then I sprang up wildly.

"Oh, father, father, go down to the Black Horse!" I exclaimed. "The peddler is there, and he has my pin."

My father's first thought was that the good fortune had turned my brain. I explained as well as I could to him, but only seemed making me; but on finding the pin and the peddler, he knew more of the world than his foolish child, and was not so hopeful.

However, he thought it best to go, and for me to go with him. So in a few moments we were walking down to the Black Horse. The landlord was sitting alone in his front porch, smoking quietly. He looked surprised when we walked up the steps, but very politely invited us into the parlor, explaining that his women folks had gone to church.

"Is there a peddler staying with you, Mr. Ford?" began my father.

"A peddler!—no," exclaimed the landlord, as if the question vexed him. "I have not seen a peddler for three weeks, and the one that was here then did not pay his bill."

I must have turned very pale at this, and felt faint again. Mr. Ford wanted me to take a cordial. My father carried it off, saying I was tired. Then he said that I had made a little bargain with a peddler the day before, and that we wished to settle with him.

"Got cheated, I warrant," said the blunt old landlord; "but no such man came to this house yesterday. I do recollect now that Joe, my ostler, said he saw a fellow with a big black box of bundle come up the bank from the creek just after the stage passed; but I didn't pay any attention to him."

My father gave up all hope at once; but I could not believe my fortune was gone. He tried to comfort me, saying I was just as well off as before, and had a new dress into the bargain. How I hated the thought of my beautiful merino!

Well, it is of no use to prolong my story, or tell you of all the efforts made to catch the adroit thief. He was no peddler, but a clerk in that very law office from which the letter was sent telling us of the diamonds. He managed to delay the letter to my father for a good while, hastened away himself, and obtained my pin.

We never found him; we never heard of him. He must have got off somewhere over the sea with his prize. My poor, toiling father, always gentle, did not reproach me; but even to this day the regret lies heavily on my mind: for what might I not have done for him and the dear children with all that money?

And the lady who had given me the pin did not know until she was dying the value it was of; and then caused the stir. Ah me! it was one of those chances in life that perhaps we all miss on occasion; the tide in the affairs of men that taken at the flood leads on to fortune." And about my crimson dress? She is large while, baby-stout; I am small, I could not look at it or let it be made up. But time soothes troubles. And I must say that it made a charming gown, and one who was an artist saw me in it and made me his wife. So perhaps it all happened for the best.

But I'm sure I hope that wicked peddler—who made believe to speak like a foreigner the better to take me in—came to be hanged! —The Argosy.

MR. RUSKIN ON COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.—"By competitive examination of course?" Sternly, no! But under absolute prohibition of all violent and strained effort—most of all envious or anxious effort—in every exercise of body and mind; and by enforcing on every scholar's heart, from the first to the last stage of his instruction, the irrevocable ordinance of the third "Fors Clavigera," that his mental rank among men is fixed from the hour he was born—that by no temporary or violent effort can he train, though he may seriously injure, the faculties he has; that by no manner of effort can he increase them; and that his best happiness is to consist in the admiration of powers by him forever unattainable, and of acts and deeds by him forever unimitable. Some ten or twelve years ago, when I was first actively engaged in art teaching, a young Scottish student came up to London to put himself under me, having taken many prizes (justly, with respect to the qualities looked for by the judges) in various schools of art. He worked under me very earnestly and patiently for some time; and I was able to praise his doings in what I thought very high terms; nevertheless, there remained always a look of mortification on his face after he had been praised, however unqualifiedly. At last he could hold out no longer, but one day, when I had been more than usually complimentary, turned to me with an anxious, yet not unconfident expression, and asked, "Do you think, Sir, I shall ever draw as well as Turner?" The answer for a second or two, first much taken aback, and then answered, (I do not mean that I answered in these words, but to the effect of them, at greater length,) "It is far more likely that you should be made Emperor of all the Russias. There is a new Emperor every fifteen or twenty years on the average, and by strange hap and fortunate cabal anybody might be made Emperor; but there is only one TURNER in 500 years, and God decides, without any admission of auxiliary cabal, what piece of clay his soul is to be put in."—Fors Clavigera.

A MARRIAGE AT EL-KESAR.—El-Kesar contains about 9,000 inhabitants, a large proportion of whom are Jews. The town was in a state of great commotion when we arrived, as a few days previously a member of the large family of the Shereefs, or soi-disant descendants of the Prophet, had arrived from Fez for the purpose of marrying the daughter of a man of the town. The inhabitants of the neighboring hills, a rather simple and primitive people, unfortunately having heard of the forthcoming event, arranged to offer some presents, consisting of a few sheep and cattle, to the Shereef. These they sent by the hands of chosen deputies to the number of 2,000, selected chiefly from the youth of the tribe, who in due time arrived at El-Kesar with the offerings, having also brought their arms in case of accidents. On entering the town the mountaineers proceeded to the house of the Shereef and duly presented their gifts, which were received with thanks and a highly-complimentary speech. The worthy fellows then commenced to make themselves at home. One party repaired to the gate of the town, where a kind of tax is collected in the form of a duty levied on every camel or mule load passing in or out of the gate-way. They entered the Custom-house established here, told the officials and soldiers in charge that their services were dispensed with, and allowed them to take their departure, after having been rather roughly handled. They then proceeded to plunder the treasury of any ready cash they found there, which they divided among themselves, after which they established, on their own account, a gate duty like the former one, charging, however, only half the amount per load. Another and much larger party at the same time made a raid on the market-place, which they at once looted, thrashing severely any of the owners of the merchandise who resisted them. After this they repaired to the Jews' quarter, beat and otherwise maltreated any of that most unfortunate race whom they chanced to meet, burst open the houses, robbed the contents, and fired volleys in through the various windows, wounding several of the inmates, apparently out of pure recklessness and love of mischief. Matters had at last assumed so serious an aspect that the Pasha was obliged to send a message inviting these interesting children of nature to leave the town and go to their camping-ground outside the walls. This proposal they were good enough to accede to, and passed out through the gates (which were at once closed) without doing any further mischief.—From "With the American Embassy from Tangiers to Fez," by Ben Tarick, in the Dark Blue Magazine for September.

GEORGE SAND ON SOCIETY IN FRANCE.—Corruption! Corruption! (cries the writer.) The people, too, have been drawn into this fatal current. The artisan is wrong in comparing himself to the fellah. No matter what he says, he is very free, and his salary has augmented with the dearness of living; but he may say with truth that he has become a Bohemian, and that he is hardly a citizen any longer. He has acquired a certain taste for vice. His family has become a hell. The necessity of scamping round the great centres of work has given him the habits of moral and physical insanity. Where he has been brought into contact with our corrupted civilization in the cities, and especially in Paris, his intelligence has greatly developed itself on the surface, but not in depth; he understands everything and knows nothing. He laughs at the vices and ridiculous pretensions of the bourgeoisie, and parodies them, and he sets himself up as a man of ability, a fine speaker and an enlightened thinker. There is nothing so sad as to see and hear this windbag without taste, inspiration, or philosophy. Alas! the workman has turned poseur without ceasing to be barbarous. He used to be simple, good-humored and witty, but now he makes use of set phrases which he does not understand, and technical terms which he tortures. He is a ridiculous mountebank. He is no longer satisfied with being your equal, he wishes you to feel that he is your superior. . . . What shall be said of those who have no ambition to rise, but who take the epoch as they find it, and besot themselves with alcohol and debauch? Their drunkenness is gloomy and furious. The eye is infected with blood, the voice is hoarse and broken, the speech cynical, the silence sinister. Ah, poor people! Formerly you complained that you were chained to your work with hardly time to recuse on the Sunday. Now you have higher wages, and you work as you will from Monday morning till Tuesday morning you are drunk; that you work badly on Tuesday, and only work in reality two or three days in the week. You make a beast of yourself; that is the benefit which you derive from a life of luxury. The Fairs of VOLTAIRE and of JEAN-JACQUES ROUSSEAU has become the city of SARDANAPALUS. Instead of free schools in our villages, they give us salaries in our prefectures. . . . Our rich young men amuse themselves. Our poor young men get tipsy. Our rich young women intoxicate themselves with pleasure. Our poor young women sell themselves.

A CYNICAL NEWSMONGER.—During the season 1840-41, I had the gratification of restoring another of our glorious old English comedies to the modern stage—BEAUMONT and FLETCHER'S "Spanish Curate," and in the following, and last season of Mme. VESTRIS' management, the pleasure of reviving my English version of the "Love Chase" for the first appearance of ADELAIDE NEILSON, now Mrs. LAUNFORD. While superintending the production of KNOWLES' "John of Procida," I met with an accident, which I only mention for the sake of a characteristic anecdote in connection with it. In passing from the stage into the pit over some planks that had been placed for the purpose of our going to and fro to see the effect of the scenery, one of them slipped, and, falling on the back of a pit seat, I broke a rib, and was consequently confined to my house for about a fortnight. On my first visit to the theatre afterward, I crawled out to see some luncheon at the Garrick, and, returning to the theatre at a very slow pace, I met under the piazza one of the reporters of the Morning Herald, with whom I was slightly acquainted. He stopped me, and remarked upon my attention in my appearance and the difficulty I seemed to have in walking, which he explained to him the cause upon which he explained, "God bless me! How sorry I am I never heard of it!" I was both touched and surprised by the evident interest he took in the matter, considering we knew so little of each other, and was about to express my appreciation of his sympathy, when before I could speak he added, "It would have made such a capital paragraph!"—Recollections by J. R. Planché, in London Society.

THE PATAGONIANS AND THEIR INFANTS.—Their superstition makes them regard as divinities all phenomenal children, principally such as are born with a larger number of fingers or toes than is natural to them. According to their belief, it is a presage of great happiness for their family. As to those that are altogether deformed—such cases are very rare—or whose constitution does not appear to fit them for the kind of life they would have to lead, they make away with them, either by breaking their limbs or smothering them; they then carry them to a distance and abandon them, without burial, to the wild dogs and birds of prey. If the innocent little creature is considered worthy to live, it becomes from that instant the object of the whole love of its parents, who, if necessary, will submit themselves to the greatest privations to satisfy its least wants or exactions. They place their newborn on a small ladder, which serves it instead of a cradle. The upper portion of its little body rests on the cross-pieces or rounds ranged close together, and covered with sheep-skin, while the lower part is inclosed in a sort of hollow formed by other cross-pieces below the uprights. The child is held in this position by soft cords wound above the skins which serve it instead of linen.—Three Years of Slavery among the Patagonians.

WRITING FOR MONEY.—To write for money was once held to be disgraceful, and BYRON, as we know, taunted SCOTT because his publishers combined "To yield their muse just half a crown a line;" while SCOTT seems half to admit that his conduct required justification, and urges that he sacrificed to literature very fair chances in his original profession. Many people might, perhaps, be disposed to take a bolder line of defence. Cut out of English fiction all that which has owed its birth, more or less, to a desire of earning money honorably, and the residue would be painfully small. The truth, indeed, seems to be simple. No good work is done when the one impelling motive is the desire of making a little money; but some of the best work which has ever been done has been indirectly due to the impecuniosity of the laborers. When a man is empty he makes a very poor job of it in straining colorless trash from his hardbound brains; but when his mind is full to bursting he may still require the spur of a moderate craving for cash to induce him to take the decisive plunge.—From "Hours in a Library," in the Cornhill Magazine for September.

JAMES STEPHEN THE ELDER.—He was a man of very considerable powers, combined with great firmness of purpose, and unquenchable ardor. Strong in body as well as mind, he was capable of undergoing any amount of labor, and, wedded to his own opinion, he resisted all attacks with a firmness that amounted to obstinacy. The best part of his life had been passed in the West Indies, where he practiced at the bar; on his return to England he came into Parliament, under the auspices of his great friend, PERCEVAL; for STEPHEN was a member of the Evangelical Party, to which PERCEVAL had a strong leaning, although he did not actually belong to it. As a speaker he certainly had considerable success; but yet neither as a debater nor as a speaker could he be classed as of a high order. He had not the correct taste which is acquired by the habit of frequenting refined society, and the practice of addressing a fastidious audience. He held upon political subjects very decided opinions, and at all times was ready to assert them with the most determined and uncompromising spirit. He was strong upon the slave question, and felt this as above all others sacred, not only from his strong religious feelings, but from his near connection with WILBERFORCE, whose sister he had married; and upon this subject he published many valuable works.—Lord Brougham's Life and Times, vol. 2.

SPIRIT OF RELIGIOUS PRESS.

Throughout the entire country the one great topic for all newspapers, religious as well as secular, is the condition of New-York municipal affairs. The Independent seems to think that there is danger that the occasion will not be fully improved. It says:

"The Tammany Ring is now broken. Its unity is gone. The chief plotters of the nefarious conspiracy are quarreling among themselves and turning traitors to each other. Each wants to save his own neck. OAKEY HALL and PETER B. SWEENY would be glad to make a scapegoat of CONNOLLY, and, by forcing him to resign his office, appease the public indignation. Mr. CONNOLLY does not see it in this light, and has the idea of being made a burnt offering to atone for the sins of his associates in crime. He proposes that they shall all be hung on the same gibbet, and be buried in the same grave; and in this respect the public entirely agree with him. The people should seize their opportunity to drive these men to the wall, to compel the resignation of every one of them, to indict and punish them for their crimes, to recover, if possible, the funds fraudulently abstracted from the Treasury, and, in short, sweep away the last vestige of the Tammany Ring. The whole thing is an intolerable stench and disgrace to New-York, and now that the public mind has at last been awakened to the danger, let every effort be done, sparing nothing and retaining nothing that has the slightest odor of Tammany in its garments. Now is the time to make an example of official villainy and villains—the whole of it and all of them—that will stand as a monumental warning to others for at least half a century."

The Methodist arrives at much the same conclusion in the following manner:

"The strenuous effort now making to overthrow the City Ring has disclosed again the weak point of our State institutions. Our trouble now is not so much that we are plundered to make rogues rich, as that we cannot depend on our Judiciary to help us. There is no tribunal with competent jurisdiction to which we can appeal in confidence that we shall receive from it exact justice. Our State Courts are variable and uncertain; some of the Judges are infamous, and we have a Judge sitting in judgment upon a quartet of scamps with whom he has for years been politically associated. The spectacle is enough to make one sick. No one fact better shows the depth of degradation to which New-York had sunk. Two results have come of the corruption of our Judiciary: one is a disposition to compromise with the Ring by playing off its members against each other; the second is a call for a vigilance committee. No reputable persons would demand the latter resort to revolution were there not a sense of the hopelessness of the effort to conquer the Ring through the Courts. . . . Honest men can never confide in a safe bargain with rogues. . . . Compromise will disgrace New-York more than all the crimes of TWEED and his company. We are not going to get back to good Government in a day or a month. If our cure is to be radical, it will be slow, and no other cure is worth naming. We must reform the Judiciary by making it once more independent, and hitting it only on points on which RADICAL was accustomed to hit some of the guiltiest in the case now before him on his success as a politician. That little incident tells the whole story. Political Judges must obey the will of political magnates."

The United Presbyterian cannot but admire the forbearance displayed by the New-York populace. It says:

"Affairs in New-York are extremely breezy. The astounding revelations made concerning the robberies of the City by the public officials have stirred the people as they never were stirred before. At first the Ring was defiant, evidently feeling safe, and believing the storm would soon blow over, but they at length began to tremble, afterward to quail, and they at last have begun to flee. The power and the scorn that has been visited on them is awful, and the amount of bitterness that is felt toward them all is fearful to contemplate. It shows how much of self-restraint there is, amid all the reckless violence of the times, when the pillaged citizens can wait on the tardy processes of law, instead of rising and tearing their spoilers to pieces. There is something wonderful about. We cry out against the wrongs of the age; when there is such an example of heroic self-restraint let it be fittingly mentioned. But we verily believe that if the honest people of New-York failed to get rid of them by legal means, they would resolve themselves into a tribunal of condemnation, and treat them as such scoundrels were once treated in California. Hints to this effect have been thrown out in some of even the more staid papers of the City. This extremity we are glad to see is likely to be unsalted for. The rascals have fallen out among themselves. Their Ring is broken and dying to pieces. And although they may never get their deserts, they will certainly be buried from authority and be a blessing to honest people all the rest of their lives."

The Jewish Times thinks that the power of the Press as a means of suppressing evil, was never better illustrated than during the past few weeks. It says:

"The power of the Press, if wielded in the interests of truth, honesty and justice; if launched against wrong, corruption and oppression, is truly the most powerful weapon of modern times; is a power which no one can deny; it will batter down combinations of wrong, be they ever so well fortified, ever so strong. This has been best exemplified in the recent history of our own City. Its misgovernment has become powerful, the unlimited means at the disposal of its rulers had been used not only to spread corruption throughout the City, but throughout the State; and so securely did these men feel in their position, that they were at no pains to disguise their shameful actions. Offices were bought and sold in open daylight, and official functionaries needed only the ratification of the 'quadrilateral' to be certain of election, by fair or corrupt means, and the plan was already laid to extend the blessings of this 'rule of four' to the Government of the United States. Denunciations from the pulpit and the rostrum, all were of no avail, until the public Press took hold of the matter in good earnest and pouring hot shot into the fortified camp, it effected an opening and a breach so wide that a committee of seventy impartial citizens entered in triumph and took possession of the nest of corruption. The chiefs, once so absolute, so defiant, so powerful, tremble now in the face of the storm that has been conjured up by the persistent battering-rams of the New-York Press; they stand now before the tribunal of public justice as did GERman Emperor stood once before the Pope of Rome in the robes of the penance-doing sinner."

In commenting upon the reported misery betrayed in the confession of confession by Pay-master HODGE, the National Baptist says:

"The Omniscient One alone knows how many counterparts of this experience exist among us. We have reason to believe they are very numerous. In view of the ludicrous passion for gold which prevails, and which, when delay in its gratification, is would be marvelous if this were not so. In the mad race for riches men subvert every power of their being to the work of coining money. They are committed to success. Their wits are racked, and their consciences strained. Imperceptibly to themselves, the principles of what is legitimate in business undergo a change, until the ever-looming end obscures the character of the means employed to attain it. The extravagance of the period, which is essentially allied to the rapid acquisition of wealth, has considerable to do with the decay of morality in business pursuits. The enormous expenses of style are begotten of an unhallowed and debasing pride which yields on the slave of Mammon, never permitting him to stop. To stop is to surrender all. Therefore, despair compels the victim to get money somehow—compels him to steal if he cannot earn it. And so all around us, false-guided lives, to whom the name of happiness is mockery, are slowly, it may be, but surely, moving on to the crisis of their infamy. These lives were not designedly spent thus. The first steps in such a career are short and careful, and almost always made with the expectation of retracing them. But they spring from false ideas of life. How long it takes most people to learn that wealth cannot confer peace of mind, without which there can be no contentment, no happiness!"

The American Messenger considers that it is necessary for the future welfare of the country that the efforts to break down the legal observance of the Sabbath-day should be defeated. It says:

"The question of maintaining unimpaired the observance of the Sabbath as a day of rest does not concern New-York alone: it is one that affects our whole land. The Sabbath is the corner-stone of our free institutions. Its sacredness, observance by our fathers was one of the most marked of all their peculiarities, and was transmitted to their children as a precious heir-loom. It has always carried with it the evident proofs of its wisdom and necessity. It is a mistaken and selfish policy that would break down its safeguards and devote its sacred hours to secular pursuits and pleasures. But this is the determined and concerted plan in which many designing men, particularly in our great cities, are persistently engaged. . . . A most healthy and encouraging indication has been the stand taken by a large portion of the respectable German population, to resist the repeal of the Sunday laws. They protest themselves firmly on the absolute necessity of the Sabbath for the moral and physical well-being of the people, maintaining that the principle of one day's rest in seven, as kept by the opponents of the laws, did not require that one person should have the privilege at his option of disturbing another in the enjoyment of his rest and quiet on Sunday, and insisting that the agitation for the repeal of the laws was not in harmony with German ideas, and that those who wished to lay violent hands on the Sabbath represent the German element. We trust that this agitation in the Queen City of the West may lead to a decided expression from its citizens of their determination to maintain the observance of the holy day by their statutes and practice."

The Churchman thinks that there is too much restriction in Christian liberality. In order that it may be of more practical use, it says: "It is time that we began to see more commonly what is the true end of Christian liberality. At present, good people who desire to exercise Christian virtues are liable to run out of them by things which do not deserve them. The objects of these virtues are men, not sects—all men, Jews, Turks and Infidels, equally with the members of the Evangelical denominations. A Churchman's liberality can submit to no arbitrary line of limits. Its creed be as large as his Master's. And the moment we so extend it, we see how utterly the word is wasted in common religious parlance. It means Christian charity. Kindly judgment, help and sympathy for all for whom Christ died. It does not mean the confusing of principles, the stultifying of one's opinions in order to the confounding of right and wrong, least of all, the acceptance of this temporary corruption of sectarianism which is the weakness and shame of Christianity as anything but evil in its essence, and evil in all its developments. He can consent to nothing that will gild, or conceal, or apologize for, or blind men's eyes to an essential wrong, though it come to him under a good name which it has stolen."

The Liberal Christian, in speaking of the apparent unsatisfactory progress of Unitarianism, says:

"The want of money for denominational purposes has always been one of the great practical difficulties of our body, and it is inherent in our doctrinal and ecclesiastical position. We have from the first been very reluctant to acknowledge ourselves a sect, or as having sectarian ends or propagandist feelings. We only slowly grew, and with steady reluctance, into a loosely organized body. It was hatred of sectarianism ecclesiastical tyranny and dogmatic positiveness that drove our fathers out from the so-called Orthodox churches. The earlier of what are now Unitarian churches did not begin as such, nor was their alienation from Orthodox churches at first doctrinal. They simply became more truly congregational, and their independence of ecclesiastical control and dogmatic standards then left them free to accept more of the light of the times, and to float by degrees into Unitarian opinions. One of these churches has steadily refused to this day the name Unitarian, although in full sympathy with our practical opinions. There never was a time when the constituency of our body had any earnest denominational feeling of the kind prevailing in other Christian sects. How could there be? Have we ever felt inclined or able to say that we were wholly right and they wholly wrong; that salvation depended on receiving our faith rather than theirs; or that a decisive importance attached to the conversion of men from the errors of Orthodoxy to the truths of Unitarianism? Doubtless we have not yet attained an adequate sense of the value of our distinctive opinions; but that value does not reside in the external denominational correctness of our views, or their technical bearing on final salvation. We admit that sincere and earnest Christians of every order and name are just as safe as we are. But we feel that a wider charity and a sweeter cheerfulness, and a finer sense of the loveliness of religion, and a fuller development of the habits of life, certify that the only interest which certain important classes of human beings will ever take in Christianity, are immensely dependent on the offering of our opinions. And this is our chief motive for publishing them."

MILITARY GOSSIP.

The several regiments of the Second Brigade, Gen. Funk commanding, will parade fully uniformed, armed and equipped, for annual inspection and review, as follows: Third Cavalry, Oct. 2, at Fashion Course, Long Island, at 1 o'clock P. M.; Sixth Infantry, Oct. 5, at Tompkins-square, at 1½ o'clock P. M.; Eighty-fourth Infantry, Oct. 4, at Tompkins-square, at 2½ o'clock P. M.; Eleventh Infantry, Oct. 5, at Fashion Course, at 1 o'clock P. M.; Fifth Infantry, Oct. 6, at Tompkins-square, at 1½ o'clock P. M.; Ninety-sixth Infantry, Oct. 12, at Tompkins-square, at 1½ o'clock P. M. The brigade staff will assemble for inspection at Fashion Course, Oct. 2, at 1 o'clock P. M.

In the Seventh Regiment drills by company will commence on the 2d of October, and be continued weekly until the 1st of April, 1872. Major Smith is detailed to superintend the drills by company, with that particular object in view of securing perfect uniformity in all military exercises. Officers and non-commissioned officers are enjoined to be prompt and thorough in the performance of every duty connected with company instruction, and to spare no effort to improve the drill and discipline of their respective companies.

Major Fred. J. Karcher's battalion of infantry (Brooklyn) will go on its first annual target-practice excursion on Oct. 6 to East New-York.

The officers and men of the Seventy-first Regiment will assemble in full-dress uniform at the regimental armory, on next Thursday and Friday, for the purpose of receiving and escorting the United Train of Artillery of Providence. Assembly on Thursday at 11½ A. M., and on Friday at 2½ P. M.

The flag presented in the late Cuban expedition have been hung in place at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. The flags, some of which are silk and others cotton, are all upon staffs, part of which are decked with plumes, and others with spears, and exhibit mostly the wonted Chinese ugliness in design.

In September, 1861, the Fourth Regiment of New-Hampshire Volunteers was mustered into the service of the United States. The tenth anniversary of the event was celebrated in Manchester on Thursday by a reunion of the surviving members of the regiment. It was voted to hold a reunion annually. The festivities of the occasion closed by a grand ball at Smyth's Hall. The hall was beautifully decorated, and a large company was present.

The troubles in the Tenth Regiment still continue. The latest phase is found in the fact that Capt. Reilly, having made a written statement to Brig.-Gen. Woodhall of the illegal seizure of F Company's armory by Lieut.-Col. Benton, and the arrest of Lieut. St. Cyr, the General issued the following order:

HEAD-QUARTERS NINTH BRIGADE, N. G. S. N. Y.,
ALBANY, Sept. 20, 1871.

Lieut.-Col. D. S. Benton, Commanding Tenth Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y.:

You are hereby directed to relieve from arrest Lieut. Joseph Z. St. Cyr, F Company, Tenth Regiment, and to open the armory of that company immediately.

By order of
Brig.-Gen. D. M. WOODHALL.
J. S. DICKERMAN, Lieut.-Col. and A. A. G.

The Forty-ninth Regiment will rendezvous to-morrow at their armory in Auburn, for field exercise, which will take place at the lake. The commanders were practicing last week in the loadings and firings. Dinner will be served on the drill ground. Jay E. Storke has been appointed Adjutant in the Forty-ninth, vice J. W. Haigat Jr., resigned.

The Albany Argus states that an erroneous impression has been conveyed in a statement which was made in the City last week to the effect that the Adjutant-General of New-York State has issued a general order forbidding the wearing of gilt baldrics by officers. Such is not the case; a bill of dress for the First Cavalry was submitted to Acting Adjt.-Gen. Stonehouse who struck from it gilt baldrics and substituted the regulation belt.

The following changes are announced in the Seventy-first Regiment: Commissioned—Samuel C. Smith to be Second Lieutenant, vice Riggins, resigned; Second Lieut. Theodore W. Smith to be First Lieutenant. Resigned—Capt. Alfred Spear, Capt. Samuel T. Hopper and Adjt. J. Francis Appointments—Second-Major Geo. A. J. Norman to be Adjutant; Sergt. Davis Graham to be Left General Guide; Private John Simpson, Jr., to be Ordnance Sergeant. Private Armstrong, Company A, has been reprimanded for conduct unbecoming a soldier. It is the duty of soldiers at all times and under all circumstances to obey the orders of his superior officer, and any questioning of authority is a breach of discipline that will not be overlooked.

The next regular meeting of Company F, Ninth Regiment, will take place at the armory, on Friday evening, Oct. 6, at 8 o'clock. Col. VanWyck, the commandant, hopes that every member will take that interest in the company necessary to its full success during the drill season.

The new Professor of Engineering at West Point will be Col. Peter S. Michie, now Professor of Philosophy at the Academy. He is a graduate of the Class of 1852, and was but lately a Captain in a corps of engineers.

The exempt members of the Albany Worth Guards have completed their organization, and are actively engaged in making arrangements for their proposed excursion on Wednesday next. The officers are wholly composed of the original founders of the company, which was first organized twenty-one years ago.

According to official returns of the British Army and reserve forces consists of 488,000 men, of whom 100,765 belong to the regular army, and 366,235 to the auxiliary forces. The regular army is composed as follows: Cavalry, 12,787; horse artillery, 2,240; artillery, 19,244; engineers, 4,067; infantry, 68,222; army service corps, 2,497 and hospital corps, 696. Of the regular army 58,766 men are stationed in Ireland, and of these forces 19,605 are infantry, 4,011 cavalry, 422 horse artillery, 1,691 artillery, 630 engineers, 415 in the service corps and 139 in the hospital corps. The regular forces stationed in England, Scotland, Wales and the Channel Islands, number 78,997. The auxiliary forces consist of an army reserve, composed as follows: Army reserves, first class, 3,006; second class, including enrolled pensioners, 12,960; militia, 136,044; yeomanry cavalry, 14,041, and volunteers, 198,893. Militia—Artillery, 14,230; infantry and rifles, 20,631, and reserves, 21,164. Volunteer forces—Light horse, 641; artillery, 27,675; engineers, 7,009; mounted rifles, 196, and rifles, 146,182. Of the auxiliary forces, 24,468 are in Ireland, and are composed as follows: Army reserves, first class, 468; second class, 5,598, and militia, 20,474, of whom 3,816 are artillery and 17,158 infantry and rifles. The raising of volunteer forces has not been permitted in Ireland.

The following changes are announced in the Thirty-second Regiment: Sergt. Edw. Schlatter to be Color-bearer, vice Nic. Laul; Sergt. J. Bönitsch, Right General Guide; Sergt. Charles Kiehl, Left General Guide; Sergt. Robert Ritter, Marker, A; Sergt. Gutb, Marker, B; Ludwig Flesser to be Sergeant, Company A; Wm. Meier, Corporal, Company A; Andrew Roath, Corporal, Company D. Resigned—Sergt. Jas. Fisher, Sergt. Louis Kassel, of Company E, for conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline. Expelled, Private John Heath of Company D.

Major Dinkel, of Gen. Funk's staff, will inspect the armories, company and regimental books and records, and the condition of the arms and other public property of the Second Brigade Regiments on the following evenings: Third Cavalry, Oct. 16; Fifth Infantry, Oct. 17; Sixth Infantry, Oct. 23; Eleventh Infantry, Oct. 19; Eighty-fourth Infantry, Oct. 20; Ninety-sixth Infantry, Oct. 24.

Inspector-Gen. McQuade and Acting Adjt.-Gen. Stonehouse have for some days, in conjunction with several United States Army officers, been engaged in testing the arms recently submitted by different manufacturers who wish to supply the National Guard with a breech-loading musket. So far the Ward-Burton, Peabody, Remington, Springfield, (United States pattern,) and Whitney Vetterli have been tested according to the regulations which appertain to the St. Louis Board, and the greatest merit appears

The New York Times.

NEW-YORK, SUNDAY, SEPT. 24, 1871.

The New-York Times,
DAILY, WEEKLY AND SEMI-WEEKLY.

This journal is now thoroughly identified with the greatest political necessity of the times—organizing victory against all forms of corruption, whether in national or local government. For years past the TIMES has been exposing the demoralizing schemes of self-interested politicians, and its recent exertions, when the Tammany Democrats had been deserted with universal approval. It has adhered to the pledge given in its original prospectus, more than twenty years ago, that the public should be truly represented, and that measures faithfully guarded that should be left open.

Its record has been pure and honorable, and the hitherto sum of its proprietors is to manifest both such history of its past history, and of the continued attack the public regime in it. Two noted forces—the old guard, proprietors still control its policy, and guide it on all public questions. They propose that the TIMES shall continue to keep clear of all narrow and mere party associations and alliances and aim to represent the great body of the public as distinguished from personal factions. It supports a sufficiently independent position, and is free to speak the truth on all subjects and about all men. Its greatly increased circulation through-out the country adds to its power and influence. It will continue to be a faithful exponent of Republican principles and advocate with untiring energy every cause which tends to further the welfare of the people.

The utmost care will be exercised in gathering political news from abroad, special reporters during the approaching campaign. The departments of the paper will be kept up to the full and trustworthy. Reserved information will be obtained in every department of the market, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches made during elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest, are published in the semi-weekly edition; and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings of the Farmers' Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES is yet extremely a family paper, all objectionable advertisements being rigidly excluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES,
New-York City.

To Advertisers.

Advertisers in the TIMES are requested to send their notices in as early an hour in the day as possible. It is very desirable to have them all in before 12 o'clock. If this be impossible they should have their copy in before 2 P. M.

For the accommodation of up-town residents, advertisements will be received at the branch office, corner of 8th Av. and 125th-st., and at the office of the Harlem Express, No. 2 Broadway, up-town residents are charged no extra at either of these offices.

Orders from Messrs. RANDOLPH & CO., Bankers, No. 5 Rue Scribe, Paris, are the accredited agents for the NEW-YORK TIMES in that city.

Notice.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith. We cannot undertake to return any communications that are not used, nor can we undertake to preserve communications.

The Republican Party Campaign Text-Book of the Tammany Frauds, is now ready. The narrative contains all the information which can be collected on the subject, with new introductions, illustrations and notes. The pamphlet will be sold at the rate a copy, or $5 per hundred to dealers. All orders to be addressed to the NEW-YORK TIMES.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

An interview was held Friday by Herr von Arnim and Count de Remusat.

Commodore ASHBURY sailed from Liverpool yesterday, in the Cunard steam-ship Java, for New-York.

The General Transatlantic Company's steam-ship Lafayette, Capt. ROUSSAN, which had just arrived at Havre from New-York, was burned, with her cargo, as the former port yesterday.

The National Guard of Toulouse has been peaceably disarmed. A manifesto from the Count de PARIS will shortly appear adopting the programme of the Count de CHAMBORD. The Duke D'AUMALE opposes this movement of his nephew.

President THIERS will remain at Versailles until after the settlement of the question of the evacuation of French territory by the Germans and of the treaty of commerce between France and Germany.

Additional reinforcements to the Spanish garrison at Mobile have been forwarded from Malaga.

GENERAL.

The Board of Health of Lowell, Mass., reports 56 new cases of small-pox during the week, and 5 deaths.

Judge MCKEMY, of Dayton, Ohio, granted THOMAS MCGEHAN a new trial, yesterday morning, on the ground of incompetency of one juror.

Ten Ku-Klux prisoners at Raleigh, N. C., convicted of the assault of the Justice, were sentenced, Friday—two to six years' imprisonment and a fine of $1,000 each, and the others to terms ranging from six months to five years, and fines in proportion. Five members of the Ku-Klux have confessed their guilt.

Two thousand warriors are reported to be moving on the Plains, and the surveying party of the Northern Pacific Railroad have been turned back by them. SITTING BULL is said to be at the head of this force.

At a meeting of the Nineteenth Assembly District Republican Convention, last evening, Mr. DAVID H. KNAPP was unanimously nominated for Assemblyman.

The trial of JOHNSON H. GARRIS, of Richmond, Va., charged with complicity in the Hungerford forgery with EDWARD CARSON, was concluded yesterday morning. GARRIS was found guilty, and sentenced to two years in the Penitentiary. The trial lasted nine days.

Gen. MANN gave $5,000 bail before Commissioner STILLWELL, yesterday, to appear at the United States Court at New-Orleans, to answer an indictment for embezzling money letters.

About forty suits, brought by leading bankers and brokers against Ex-Collector SIMPSON BROOK, to recover internal revenue taxes paid under protest, were removed from the State to the United States Courts, yesterday, on petition of Mr. BROOK.

The Last Stroke the Worst.

The fight against the Tammany Ring has reached the stage which precedes decisive action. Every member of this community possessing the moral certainty that the leading members of the City Government have been guilty of shameless robbery, committed by the aid of perjury and forgery. To make this certainty a legal one, is the work in which the representatives of the people are now engaged. Meanwhile, the members of the Ring profess to be as cool, and maintain the outward appearance of being as defiant, as ever. HALL, as usual, comes to the front, and in the columns of the Leader delivers himself of a few idiotic jokes and some slanderous drivel, which only helps to illustrate how venomous this poor clown of the Ring would be if he had the power. And this is all that TWEED, SWEENY & HALL can do in the crisis of their fate—throw dirt around to hide their own exceeding blackness. New-York is slowly awakening to the fact that it has allowed itself to be ruled by a parcel of men who are nearly as great fools as they are knaves. Their attempts to cover up the traces of their stealings have been as clumsy as their mode of stealing itself. Confronted with the honest indignation of an outraged community, they fall back upon the thieves and rowdies to whom they are chiefly indebted for their power. Their organs threaten a bloody revolution the moment the prison doors have opened, which they must, sooner or later, enter.

Should the events of the present week compel the guilty officials of the City to throw aside the mask, and openly to invoke the aid of the ruffians who are their allies, the people will be found prepared to show, what is sometimes doubted, that we are strong enough to deal with the organized rowdyism which is intrenched in our very midst. Violence will recoil on the heads of the men who provoke it, and the community will have learned a lesson which this generation will not forget. Meanwhile the attempt to intercept the work of reform by embarrassing the people's representative in the Controller's office, has miserably failed. Mr. GRIMES will be supported with money enough to satisfy all claimants who cannot wait. The men who have stolen the money of the park laborers and the school teachers, will not voluntarily disgorge a single cent for their relief. The credit of our present rulers is hopelessly gone, and the funds which could not safely be entrusted in their hands will be advanced to a man who will honestly administer them. Before the pressing claims against the City assume much larger proportions, the existing Board of Apportionment ought to be placed beyond the possibility of causing any further derangement of public business.

An Example for Youth.

Honest administration, reasonable taxes, a well-regulated City, and the re-establishment of New-York's Municipal fair fame, are not the only beneficial results to be looked for in the overthrow of the Tammany conspirators. We have frequently dwelt upon the deplorable effect that these examples of successful villainy must of necessity have upon our rising generations. It was not possible that such men, confessed even by their own partisans to be grossly dishonest, yet rolling in wealth and crowned with civic honors, should fail to exert a baleful influence on the young and inexperienced. Gold, and what gold buys, usually dazzle the youthful imagination, and the consequences of seeing audacious men grasping with unscrupulous hands all material good within their reach, literally rioting in plunder, yet going totally unwhipped of justice, must inevitably have been injurious. These prosperous scoundrels have shone in the eye of our New-York youth much as such heroes as CLAUDE DUVAL and JACK SHEPPARD have shone in the past. Their lives of glittering impunity have been so many lures tempting ambitious lads to try and do likewise. Money, money at any price, has hence grown in a great measure to be the god of juvenile idolatry; and it is plain how naturally they have been led to ask if one man, or set of men, may disregard all moral obligations in thus clutching the supreme good, and may live thereafter not unscathed alone but even honored, why may not others follow the example?

It cannot be denied that much mischief has been wrought in the manner we indicate. Every now and then the newspapers report epidemics of youthful depravity, the worst illustrations of which have clearly been traceable to just such influences. When we hear of "Rings" made up of boys who conspire together to thieve and share their booty, we are forcibly convinced of this. The only disgrace seems to be, like that of the youth of Sparta, in being caught. A short time ago there were gangs of youthful highwaymen—Tammany "braves" in embryo—who systematically robbed ladies of their purses in the streets, one adventurous young varlet seizing and making off with the prize, while his companions forcibly arrested pursuit. Of course, when big miscreants, who vote for Tammany politicians, have robbed, shot and stabbed without punishment, the smaller rascals have been encouraged to construct a plausible theory of escape for themselves. The number of these predatory urchins is, however, relatively small. The exemplification of successful crime, so vividly presented by the Tammany conspirators, has had a far wider and more disastrous influence. We shall hardly be contradicted if we assert that the worship of simple material success, as dissociated from desert, has grown to be alarmingly conspicuous among our rising generation. There is a familiar story imputed, wrongly, doubtless, to an old Quaker, whose counsel to his son was: "John, get money; honestly if thee can; but John, get money." The more condition thus illustrated and enjoined has been, as we are persuaded, sadly prevalent among our young people; and the wretched individuals whose [illegible] we [illegible] checked are in a considerable degree responsible for it.

The diagnosis of these cases is, therefore, in its relation to the future as well as the present, a positive boon to society. It is lamentable that such a climax should have been delayed so long; but it is truly a matter for rejoicing that it has come at last in a form so flagrant and unmistakable. Every child who runs today about the streets of New-York knows that these men are virtually condemned felons. A brand is set upon them which they cannot conceal, and which they will find ineffaceable. Their permanent exclusion from decent society will be only one of the punishments of their guilt; and the boys and girls who are growing up will understand clearly how it was that the culprits disgraced themselves, and how it is that they must stand forever pilloried the marks of public scorn. It is surely a salutary thing for the rising generation to witness so forcible a proof that the way of the transgressor is not always easy, and that honesty may really be the best policy after all.

Clerical Honor—Again.

We have published one communication from a clergyman of the Episcopal Church in defense of Mr. CHENEY, of Chicago, and on Thursday morning we published another from a Low Churchman. We are not surprised at receiving these pleas in Mr. CHENEY's favor. The subject is one of moment to all who are in communion with the honored Church of which that gentleman claims still to be a presbyter, and it has bearings which give it, besides, a general public interest.

The pleas in Mr. CHENEY's favor are briefly but comprehensively these: That his ministration of his office has been in order; that the Court which tried him is open to exceptions, both in form and spirit; that his congregation are strongly desirous that he should retain his place, and, finally, that this is a struggle between High Church and Low Church, in which Mr. CHENEY, is "evangelical" and "broad," and his Bishop is "Popish" and "narrow." This is all that has been presented by both our correspondents, in refutation of our judgment that such a position as that taken and held by Mr. CHENEY, is not consistent with what men of the world call honor. Now, within the Episcopal Church the first two of these pleas, which alone are of essential importance, will be regarded as futile or sound, according to the party views of those who consider them. High Churchmen, as a body, will deny plumply that Mr. CHENEY's ministrations have been in order; and they will assert roundly that the Court which tried him was unexceptionable. Low Churchmen, as a body, will as strongly assert just the contrary. Indeed, the Low Church feeling in the matter is shown by the separation of one of our correspondents, that Mr. CHENEY "will be an instrument in the hands of God to deliver the Protestant Episcopal Church from even a seeming avowal of an unscriptural doctrine, and also that Bishop WHITTAKER will be brought to a better mind, and led to regard regeneration as something greater and more spiritual than the mere outward form of baptism."

This is, in fact, the gist of the whole contest. Mr. CHENEY has set out to deliver the Episcopal Church from a seeming avowal of what, in their judgment, is an unscriptural doctrine—to wit, the doctrine held by Bishop WHITTAKER and his party that baptism is regeneration, or at least something greater and more spiritual than a mere outward form. Now, with the merits of this controversy we have nothing to do, nothing whatever. The Episcopal Church may avow, or seem to avow, that complete immersion in water, at 212 degrees Fahrenheit, is essential to valid baptism; and that such baptism is absolution and remission of all sin; and it would not concern us as a secular journal, except in regard to the physical consequences that might follow the administration of the rite. And if upon this subject there arose two parties in the Church, one of which should insist that water at a considerably lower temperature met all the requirements of the case, and that immersion even at 212 did not operate as perfect absolution—for instance, of a certain rebellious feeling which might arise at the period of complete immersion—and the other party should insist both upon the temperature and the remission, the partisans even of such extreme, and, we may even venture to say, such absurd views of religion, might fight their quarrel out undisturbed by our animadversions, except, perhaps, by way of cooling counsel. But if in the supposed case any rector of an Episcopal Church should deem it his duty not to boil his parishioners by way of regenerating them, and they also should come to the conclusion that they could be regenerated without being boiled, we should then deem it their duty to come out plainly, clergyman and people, and say: "We can no longer conform to the articles, the canons and the rubric of this Church, and we therefore absolve ourselves from them by severing our connection with the Church; its laws are no longer binding upon us, its officers are no longer our ecclesiastical superiors, we ask no functional care from its Bishops, and we owe them neither allegiance nor deference."

To drop the extreme case which we have supposed, (and which we have purposely made impossible and extravagant that it might be beyond objection to either party,) if a voluntary member of any organized community finds that the laws, or even the established customs, of that community do not conform to his sense of right and justice, two courses are honorably open to him; the first, which is the briefest and most peaceful, is to withdraw himself at once and absolutely; the second, by which he may be a benefactor, or an "instrument," is to remain in the community and labor to convince his fellow-members that the laws and customs should be changed, conforming himself, nevertheless, meanwhile strictly to them, as Christ did, and Socrates.

To remain in the community, and to claim its name and its privileges, and in one way or another, if possible, to attain the latter, is not consistent with what men of the world (whether they are churchmen or not) call honor, or even consistency. As to Mr. CHENEY's conduct, whether he has conformed strictly to the canons and the rubrics of his Church, is a very simple question, and easily to be determined; whether the Court which pronounced that he had not done so was a proper and a just one, is a question to be decided by a higher and unexceptionably competent authority. Mr. CHENEY has his appeal; and the Bishop of Illinois is responsible to the General Convention and the House of Bishops, no less than his presbyter. Meanwhile, however, the latter owes obedience to his ecclesiastical superior. This, however, unless his course is directly misreported, he refuses to render; and he and his congregation with, in school-boy phrase, to eat their cake, and have it too. They wish to be Episcopalians without deferring to Episcopal authority.

But we do not purpose having a discussion with Mr. CHENEY's supporters, or making ourselves the organ of his opponents. Nor did we even design to condemn him particularly. We have only used his case as an example, to illustrate a tendency too common of late among clergymen of certain denominations, to play the game of run with the hare and hold with the hounds.

Pity the Poor Protestant.

Everybody knows that the non-Catholic portion of this community has long been plotting and practicing the most unjustifiable schemes against the members of the Catholic Church. If everybody does not know this, it is because everybody does not read the Irish Catholic newspapers. It only needs an occasional consultation of those veracious chroniclers to learn that a vast conspiracy is on foot to deprive the Roman Catholics of their right to rule this community without interference from heretics or infidels. This conspiracy has its headquarters, our readers may like to know, in the TIMES office. One of the leaders in the movement is our German Governor, whom the journals we have referred to delight to call the Baron von HOFFMAN. A very active member of the cabal that treacherously seeks to oust Romanism from their natural and constitutional supremacy is one THOMAS NAST, generally believed to be a Prussian. He is aided and abetted by a set of bloated Protestant millionaires, engaged in publishing HARPER & BRO.'s periodicals. Next to the TIMES, which is credited with untold influence, our Catholic rulers fear the rebel NAST, who presents his incendiary ideas in such an attractive and picturesque manner, that it overtaxes the utmost ingenuity of the priesthood to counteract them. It don't do any good to keep their people from being able to read, because NAST's artful productions appeal even to those who can't read. As for HOFFMAN, they are very bitter on him, but they say that they made him and they can unmake him.

It is not greatly to be wondered at that our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens should feel indignant at any attempt to secure to non-Catholics a share in the government of the City and State of New-York. They have had the best of reasons for some time to regard that Government as their own, private property, subject only, of course, to the general lien held on all their possessions by the Pope and the priesthood. No one has seriously disputed their claim. The Ring is entirely in the control of the Romanists. Two of the Four are members of the Holy Church, a third is assiduous in all labors demanded by the priests, and the fourth is notably willing to do anything, however distasteful to himself personally, in order to propitiate the denomination, even to parading in green garments on St. Patrick's Day, and forbidding to Protestants the use of the streets for a procession.

In the Legislature, the Romanists have also been taught by the most convincing proofs that it was their part to command, and the part of the people's representatives to obey. When men like the notorious TOM FIELDS join the Church for political motives; when a Mr. Lawrence County politician, supposed to become a Senator from Kings County, appears on the roll of obedient Catholics; when the Senators from this City vie with each other in proposing appropriations of the people's money for Catholic institutions, we suppose that our Catholic brethren are not so different from the rest of mankind as to doubt a title to supremacy which is so generally acknowledged and so substantially confirmed. Men who rule, naturally think they have a right to rule. If the leaders of the Catholic masses can go into the Controller's office, or the Chamberlain's office, or the Board of Public Instruction, or the Boards of Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen, or the Sheriff's office, or the Register's office, or into the Health Commission, or the Commission of Charities, or into the Superior Courts, or any one of a half dozen minor Courts, and be sure of finding good Catholics at the head, and willing tools in all the subordinate places, they may be pardoned for assuming that a power so vast and unresisted as theirs must come of a sort of divine right, which it is at once treason, heresy, and blasphemy to deny.

Moreover, the children are learning what the fathers have been taught. The gentle sway of the priest is established as firmly in many of our schools as in the City Hall or the County Court-house. In five Wards in this City, Catholics are in the majority in the Boards of Trustees. In the Board of Public Instruction they are represented by a very zealous, but very resolute man, the President thereof, and the Clerk is a devout attendant on one of the churches whose priest, we regret to say, hates the public schools with a feeling almost unchristian. It is perfectly natural, under these circumstances, that Protestant teachers should give way to Catholics, and that even Democratic Protestants should gradually be replaced in the school boards by Catholics. The amiable Miss MCMANUS, Tammany manager for the Fifth Ward, recently remarked, concerning an American Democrat who had dared to aspire to a trusteeship:

"The times is past when American Democrats are going to be elected to offices in the Fifth Ward, an' pedad, ye may make up your minds that it won't come any more. We don't want any American Democrats. We can get along without 'em."

He was only applying, in his own elegant way, to his own Ward, a principle to which a great many Catholics seem devoted. Mr. MURRAY's dictum was accepted as law in the case referred to. Is it strange that he should feel his honest soul indignant if any Americans, "Democrats" undertook to snatch his sceptre from him?

There is nothing in this world so inconvenient as restraint, and when men have been freed from it for a long time, it is very hard to accept it again. For instance, a great many years ago, when there were not Catholics enough in the City Government to do as they chose with it, the Board of Education adopted a rule that the Bible should be read in the public schools, and the rule was reinforced by other rules to the effect that no teacher should be paid who neglected to read it, but that each teacher should forfeit his or her position. No one thought of objecting then. Even unbelievers, who regarded the Bible as of no divine authority, were very willing that their children should hear it read. The most skeptical did not think it an evil that the young should each day listen to precepts of pure morality. The objection, curiously enough, came, when it did come, from the most devout believers in the authority of the Christian religion,—from the spiritual descendants of the Saints and the Crusaders. These people, who believe that the dictates of their Church are much more authoritative than any mere rules of a temporal board, quietly ignored the rule requiring the reading of the Bible, and in fourteen of our schools the language of the Scriptures is never heard. Is it strange that a sect which has accomplished such feats as this without trouble, should be restive under any attempt on the part of non-Catholic Americans to bring them back to obedience to law, in common with other citizens?

When, therefore, as we stated at the beginning of our article, the Irish Catholic papers treat every attempt to break down the rule of Tammany, or to reduce the government of the City to a genuine Democracy, as a conspiracy against the Catholics, we are not surprised. We are only the more convinced that the means the people of the City and State assert their right to a government that can neither be corrupted nor trifled with by any sect, the better it will be for all concerned.

The Worst of a Trade a Name of Crime.

If any of our readers will take the trouble to visit our City prisons and converse with some of the numerous boys and young men sentenced there for criminal offenses, he will discover that very many avow "the want of a trade" as the special cause of their downfall. A lad who is apprenticed to a mechanical occupation, or who understands a trade, has indeed a peculiar safeguard about him in a large city. He feels himself a member of a respectable craft, and his own self-respect is increased. If a member of a union, as soon to be one, he knows that when thrown out of occupation he has friends to fall back upon, and funds to draw from. The peculiar feeling of abandonment which drives so many boys to crime, is neutralized by this connection with a large body of artisans. Then the thorough knowledge of a trade gives every young man a singular sense of independence, and keeps him out of temptation to making a living dishonestly. No man in this City could have a feeling of more perfect independence than a first-rate young carpenter or plumber, or house-builder. There can hardly be a doubt, too, that the superior intellectual character of the trades, as compared with the more drudging occupations, is a safeguard from crime. On the broad scale—omitting individual exceptions—whatever cultivates the brain and occupies the higher faculties tends so far to diminish crime. Some trades, it is true—like the printers—are liable from their late hours to peculiar temptations, especially to intoxication; but in general, it may be said, that the trades are more exempt from crime than the merely manual occupations of the City.

Besides, in a City like New-York, if a lad is kept out from a trade, he takes either to street occupations, such as paper-selling, peddling, boot-blacking, and the like, or he becomes an office-boy or messenger. But this last business is now overcrowded, so that the boys are continually forced to join the great army of the children engaged in occupations which are more than half vagrancy, and exposed to the greatest temptations. Another large body, it is true, do painful drudgery at a tender age in our factories; but here they do not learn a trade, only some minute part of a complicated manufacture, and early become stunted in mind and body. Thus a considerable class of boys who would be attracted by the inventive nature of a trade are thrown every year upon the streets, and becoming tired of drudgery, at length make short cuts to a livelihood by thieving or burglary.

The fault of this rests in part on our "unions," whose policy is selfish in the last degree. They obstinately refuse to encourage apprenticeships, and attempt to cut off the natural supply of skilled labor in the training of apprentices. They hope thus to raise the value of matured skilled labor. And now in many trades it is found that there are no young workmen of first-class, so that the best work can no longer be done except by old hands. The result is that foreign workmen are coming in to take the places of our half-educated American mechanics, and in time our native workmen will be of less value in the market than the Germans and English who are supplying their places.

But the fault is not altogether the unions'. The new generation is filled with the modern fallacy that money must be made by short cuts, and not by the fair and patient road of industry. Boys, like their elders in the Court-house, prefer "jobs" and "tickets" to steady work at a trade or business. They want a short road to fortune. They leave a trade for a street-job, and this for a thieving expedition or a burglary. In a country like ours there is really no excuse for any boy's taking up a dishonest business for a living. A walk of twenty miles would bring any lad where his work on a farm or in a garden would be well paid and in demand. The great effort of all reformers and teachers of the youth of the poorer classes in this City should be to induce the young to emigrate to the country districts. Farming and gardening are the best business for the children of the poor. The demand is immense throughout the Western country for the labor of boys and young men on farms. There the association is improving, the influences elevating, and the City pauper of today may be a land-owner and comfortable farmer in a few years.

Fortunately in this City there is an benevolent machinery carefully arranged, and which has worked with great success for many years, for transporting the friendless or homeless children of the poorest classes to the farming districts of the West; we mean the "Children's Aid Society." Through this philanthropic agency thousands of our deserted and tempted youths are placed every year in good farmers' homes, where they grow up as industrious and respectable men and women. Those of our citizens desiring to aid this public charity will do well to call at the Central office, No. 19 East Fourth-street, and examine for themselves into its workings.

Easier for Foreigners.

It really begins to look as though a time were coming when railway and steam-boat associations would no longer be screened and encouraged by the proverbial blunderheadism of railway and steam-boat officials. The arrest of the President and Superintendent of the Staten Island Ferry Company, together with their negligent engineer, was a promising step in the right direction, and now the doctrine of personal responsibility has still further been strengthened by the indictment for manslaughter of a conductor on the Old Colony Railway for whose criminal carelessness is attributed the death of a woman killed while leaving his train. Let us now see if these cases will be prosecuted in the same steadfast spirit in which they have been commenced. Nor is such punishment has been executed upon these offenders will passenger carriers in this country fairly realize that the day of irresponsible negligence has passed, and that hereafter they will be held to a rigid accountability for every human life their neglect or recklessness destroys.

In apparent opposition to this progressive and praiseworthy action in Courts and juries elsewhere, is the decision of Judge WELLS, of Boston, discharging with a reprimand a boy arrested for throwing stones through the windows of a railway car, on the ground that he was not old enough to know what he was doing. The boy was eleven years of age, and the theologians fix seven as the period when a child begins to discriminate between right and wrong. The doctrine of stoning cars is proving to be entirely too popular with the street boys of most of our large cities. Here in New-York it has long been in many parts of the town an intolerable nuisance, attended always with great annoyance, and often with material injuries to passengers thus assailed. Yet, as far as we have heard, no punishment has ever been inflicted on the young ruffians who indulge in these practices. What this unrestrained and unpunished indulgence leads to is evidenced in the villainous attempt of two boys, lately, to throw off a train on the Erie Road, near Handsome Eddy Rocks. The train, it will not be forgotten, was stopped almost by a miracle at the very verge of the precipice, and so only by a hair's breadth a most shocking disaster was averted. These precocious assassins were scarcely old enough, according to Judge WELLS's standard, to know what they were doing. The Pennsylvania authorities, however, thought otherwise, and promptly lodged them in jail, from which one of them shortly after made his escape to plan other childish massacres.

The truth is that in most cases the boys who commit such offenses know perfectly that they are wrong, and do them because of that knowledge. The school of the street is an early collegiate in vice and crime, and its pupils, before they have fairly left their swaddling-clothes, are the rivals, in intention at least, of mature sinners. At any rate public convenience demands that boys of eleven who throw stones at passenger vehicles, should be restrained from that diversion. That they know no better seems only additional reason for sending them where they will be taught better. For such a purpose juvenile reformatories are instituted and carried on,—a fact which the next Judge who has to deal with one of these youthful stone-throwers might do well to bear in mind.

MINOR TOPICS.

Two documents of interest bearing on the way the people are waging against corruption, will be found in our columns this morning. One is the address of the Committee of Seventy, appealing to the people of the State to combine in and unbreakable men to the Legislature, and showing the magnitude and nature of the Ring's rascality. Another is a letter from Gen. FRANZ SIGEL, making a similar appeal to the Germans of the City. Gen. SIGEL makes it very plain that the Germans have it in their power, by honest and wise effort, to throw down the Tammany rulers so that they can never again be set up.

Even Emperors bow to the rising sun. Immediately after his late visit to Germany, the Czar of Russia issued a ukase of unmistakable significance. By it the Ministry of Education is ordered to see that hereafter the study of German should take the priority of French in all public and private schools, and that more time shall be devoted to the former than to the latter language. It is said on good authority that the anti-German party, we believe, made hostility opposed to everything Germanic, advises to the galaxy of the Czar, and rally recognizes its importance as arm wisdom.

Prince NAPOLEON has, according to the Independance Belge, an "aversion to publicity." But for that great modesty, and the Independance finds proof of it in his recent pamphlet. The Prince says he was an entire Stranger to the declaration of war by the Emperor. Then, replies his critic, why were we left all now to find that he opposed it? His words, system, in that might have had some influence over those who held in their hands the fate of France. The Prince adds to show his magnanimity by declaring that he refused to share the captivity of his prince at Wilhelmshohe, but the offer was refused. The Independance reminds him that he might have made more of his prison if he had taken the pains to be all there. On the whole, it is a beautifully complete burlesque, this of the Emperor, "unable to die at the head of his army," an accident of his not being at the head of his army when death was before death to it, and the Prince fleeing to share captivity after having carefully kept out of the way of the foe.

A "programme" has been issued by the Liberal Republicans. With what they call it, viz., a declaration of the highest principles of politics and social rights for man, and the preservation of the institutions, liberties and general welfare of mankind," we need not quarrel; but some of the methods by which these desiderata are to be secured, are, we fear, somewhat Utopian. The wise article of the programme, which proposes "the suppression of all monopolies," at the present stage of civilization is very empty air. Scarcely a public enterprise exists but, by the determination of one class, would be swept away and plunged into chaos, by the enforcement of what that set wants, while monopolies are necessary evils. The application of the fundamental principle to all republican States," the "abolition of standing armies," and "direct legislation by the people" are propositions of a less theoretical character, but the suggestion for "pre-determination of land," in the same intended, will not at this time strengthen the hands of Mr. Wells with Mr. Sumner. It is a pity that the Liberal Republican leaders will insist on committing all political movements upon platforms that are of little importance.

When great people write biographies of other great people, there is a strong presumption of sympathy of ideas, if not of close similarity of characteristics, as between author and subject. All minds seek to ally themselves commonly impulsed by the illustrious predecessor, and confessed by their greatness. The Empress EUGENIE's Life of Julius Cæsar is an instance, but what are we to say of the forthcoming History of Mary Stuart Queen of Scots, written by the Empress EUGENIE? The work, it seems, is now complete, and it will soon appear in English dress, translated by the CHARLES DE FLAHAUT. Now, of course, to get out the likeness between CÆSAR and NAPOLEON III., need give the latter and his friends no disquiet; to dream, however, of any resemblance between poor MARY STUART and the spirited EUGENIE is not to be thought of. The explanation doubtless is that MARY is not pleasing by her Imperial biographer according to Froude, but after the new lights which it is to reveal, more agreeable to their accurate.

Russia has quietly taken possession of the Island of Sachalien, or Tarakai, and, although such a consequence is rare, the step seems thus far to have been as quietly received by the other maritime Powers. Those who express an opinion say that while the act of the Russian Government is unjustifiable, yet under their rule they resources of the Island will be much sooner developed than under the administration of Yeddo. No doubt one consideration of Russia's will seriously modify political and commercial relations hereafter in the Eastern Archipelago, and toward the whole coast of Asia. Sachalien is a very large and important island. It is one hundred miles long by a mean width of one hundred, and has an area of thirty thousand square miles. It is well wooded, and is said to contain great mineral wealth. As a naval station it is invaluable, and as such it might be made a refuge in case of need for the whole Russian fleet. It will be surprising if this is not soon eventually commented upon as the "outstanding wedge" of the imputed Russian designs upon the English East Indian Possessions. Certainly if their designs are interpreted, the possession of Sachalien would be of service in carrying them into execution.

The Parisians, from squabbling over the names of streets and the stamping of their coins, are now debating the items of their new officials. The customs, in particular, of President THIERS is a matter of anxious discussion. A plain suit of black is altogether distasteful, but anything that smacks of the imperial purple would be still more so; how, then, the golden mean is to be struck between the austerity of extreme republicanism and the qualified pomp of citizen kingship becomes the delicate question. One authority says that M. THIERS will wear a coat decked with gold lace, a stripe of gold lace down his trowsers, and a cocked hat surmounted with Grecian feathers. The Parisians might surely spare themselves so much time and time on the subject. Fashions change soon in France, and the dress of her ruler is unlikely to present an exception.

New-Orleans Exempt from Chills and Fever.

Visitors from New-Orleans to the North this season are represented to have very generally contracted chills and fever, to which they were strangers when at home. The New-Orleans Times says:

"It is not extravagant to say, that every other one of our wanderers who has been compelled to pay tribute to the bleak air and too violent changes of the Northern climate. This is especially true of those who frequented the Virginia mountains. Nearly all of them have been put through a regular course of quinine. So much is consequently said about malarial influence, and the most notable of all other sources of ill health, and especially as the chief producers of intermittent fevers, that we are pained to comprehend the undeniable fact that chills and intermittent fevers are of rarer occurrence in this city than in any other part of the United States, that our regular population is entirely free from this prevalent disease of the country, which is never contracted by any of our citizens unless they make visits to the North and West. Invariably, if you hear of a friend having chills, or meet one who has just recovered from an attack of them, you may presume it as a matter of course that he has been out of the City and brought the chills back with him. Yet it malaria and moisture are the main causes of this disease, certainly this locality and clime ought to abound therein. But it does not. Do most learned sanitarists, theorists, expound this mystery. If our climate and our low and swampy State, and our abundance of malaria and superfluity of decomposition and feculent evaporation cannot produce the same effects which they do everywhere else, why has not some learned Galen explained the causes of this peculiarity of our location, and vouchsafed the same with his generally accepted theory?

AMUSEMENTS.

HERR WIENIAWSKI'S REPRESENTATIONS.

The star of the week, before whose brilliancy all lesser lights have paled, has unquestionably been Herr THEODORE WACHTEL. He has sung in two operas, appearing thrice in "Fra Diavolo" and once in the "Trovatore." On each night the Houses have been quite stupendous, and remembering that fifty were selected in the Stadt Theatre, unexpectedly inadequate. On each night, too, the plaudits have been lavish and resonant, and all other tokens of delight freely shown. Nevertheless, it is not to be concealed that there are those who do not like Herr WACHTEL. There are things about him, doubtless, that all must like, or at least admire and own the merit of; but as a whole, regarding him as that "entire and perfect chrysolite," a truly great tenor, there are dissidents of various sorts. To difference of opinion on this point Herr WACHTEL has been well accustomed. In Paris especially his experience of it was well calculated to teach an artist philosophy. We do not, therefore, fear that his equanimity will be seriously disturbed by the discovery that in this as in other respects New-York resembles Paris. Our own estimates of his merits were so recently expressed in these columns as not to need anything approaching a complete recapitulation. We are in duty bound to say, however, that to us a rather trite expression, the sentiment has vastly improved on acquaintance. The second performance of "The Postilion de Lonjumeau" showed him to greater advantage than the first, and his work in "Il Trovatore," although it was inauspiciously commenced, proved him, at different stages of the opera, to be a skilled singer, and one to whom the Dilettanti may look with confidence for many satisfying efforts, as well as for not a few startling vocal effects. To-morrow night a second performance of VERDI'S opera is to occur at the Stadt. If passages of the tenor's scene with Azucena and his recital of "Ah! si, ben mio" are as faultless as they were on Friday, and if his execution of "Di quella pira" is as prodigious, such a pleasure as only an artist of culture and of tremendous resources can afford will be enjoyed.

MISS NILSSON'S DISAPPEARANCE.

Miss NILSSON appeared in public for the first time this season, in Montreal, on Monday. Wednesday she sang in Toronto, Friday in Buffalo, and Mr. STRAKOSCH continues the concert tour with an entertainment in Titusville to-morrow evening. All the artists who are heard in these concerts are known to the habitual reader, except M. JAMET, Mr. STRAKOSCH'S new basso. This gentleman seems to have vastly pleased his audiences, but only the fact that he has done so is mentioned by the local newspapers. The preliminary words of crowded houses introduce, as of old, all articles on the subject.

MRS. MOULTON'S CONCERTS.

A brief notice has already appeared in relation to the approaching concerts whereof Mrs. MOULTON is to be the central attraction. The lovers of music whose privilege it has been to hear Mrs. MOULTON, either in the Court reunions at the Tuileries and at Compiègne, or in society in Paris and in London, and, also, the fashionable world of New-York, have long counseled the first step in an artistic career which will surely be brilliant and remunerative. A decision as to this premier pas—which the Transatlantic proverb tells us is the most trying of all—was, however, only reached a few days ago. It is better late than never. Mrs. MOULTON will be first heard at Steinway Hall on Oct. 16. She possesses a voice of beautiful and sympathetic quality, and her advantages in respect of art-education and experience have been altogether exceptional. The engagement of a few artists of talent to surround her will enable her to announce a series of remarkable entertainments.

Theatrical.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

Mr. WALLACK announces that his theatre will shortly open for the season, and this gratifying statement is coupled with a list of his company. The public will be glad to know that while the names of many old favorites are included some new ones give assurance of abundant pleasure to come. Mr. CHARLES MATHEWS is engaged, it appears, and a round of those charming comedies of the lighter school, in which this artist is so eminent, may therefore be counted upon. Mr. JOHN GILBERT, Mr. BROUGHAM, Mr. FISHER, Mr. STODDART, Mr. POLK, and Mr. RINGGOLD are among the gentlemen of a catalogue which, closing with the name of Mr. LESTER WALLACK himself, is assuredly full of strength. Among the ladies are included Miss PERSEY MONDAUNT, from the London Olympic, who appears here for the first time, Mrs. Clara Jennings, Miss Emily Mestayer, Miss Effie Germon, Mrs. John Sefton and Miss Helen Tracy—the leaders in a fair galaxy of undoubted fascination and brilliancy. Mr. JOHN GILBERT, whose name suggests so many pleasant and worthy recollections, retains the post of Acting Manager, the efficient services of Mr. JAMES SOMERVILLE will still be had in the stage direction, Mr. THOMAS BAKER will continue to lead an orchestra that will, doubtless, discourse all that is new and sparkling with much that is old in well chosen, and Messrs. ISHERWOOD, EVANS and HILLYARD will add to the long array of their scenic triumphs. Mr. WALLACK is indeed well fortified at every point, and has taken all available and promising measures to assure what we cordially wish him, a flourishing and profitable season.

BOOTH'S THEATRE.

The first appearance these ten years of Miss CHARLOTTE CUSHMAN bids fair, we hear, to attract a brilliant throng to-morrow night to Booth's Theatre. Miss CUSHMAN'S high reputation, and curiosity among those who know that made it, to see how her efforts will compare with those of former years, will draw one class of auditors; and the younger generation, who have heard great things of Miss CUSHMAN'S Lady Macbeth and Meg Merrilies, but never seen them, will constitute another. She is to play Queen Katherine to-morrow night—a part which many ladies have essayed, but in which comparatively few have been acceptable. Mrs. SIDDONS, Mrs. BARTLEY and Mrs. WARNER—to come by a sliding scale both of chronology and merit down to our own time—have been mainly associated with the character in the history of the English drama, and Miss CUSHMAN is now by many regarded as the sole capable representative of it. She will be aided to-morrow night by Mr. WILLIAM CRESWICK, a very respectable tartar, as Cardinal Wolsey, and otherwise by such strength as the company at Booth's has to show.

CITY NOTES.

No notable event occurred to excite the theatre-goer during the week just ended. Except at the houses mentioned above, the bills this week will remain unchanged. Mr. FORREST will continue to act at the Grand Opera-House in Mr. DE WYZE'S drama of "Oofty Goofy," setting off that gentleman's "points" as nicely as possible, and Mr. GAYLER'S "Carl the Fiddler" will be given at Niblo's, with Mr. EMERY in the leading part. At Wood's Museum, we ought to note that a new drama called "La Mendiante" will be brought out to-morrow. Elsewhere affairs will be unchanged..... The Paris Pavilion Circus may be visited every day and evening this week. It is situated on Fourteenth-street, between Second and Third avenues.

Music Notes.

After singing in Springfield, Monday, Mme. PARepa-ROSA was heard in Boston, at the Music Hall, on Wednesday. The Boston Advertiser thus speaks of the lady's reappearance: "The first concert of Mme. ROSA'S series, and the first interesting musical entertainment of the season, was given in the Music Hall, last evening, in the presence of an audience of decided cultivation. Mme. ROSA'S appearance was the signal for a burst of enthusiastic applause which bespoke the hearty good will and satisfaction excited by her return to Boston; and Mr. SUCH and Mr. LAURENCE had every reason to be gratified with the warmth of their reception. Mme. ROSA'S singing more than equaled the high expectations of the audience. Her long period of rest and retirement has been fruitful in good results, and her magnificent voice rang out last night with all its wonted fullness, sonorousness and power. There was even a larger measure of richness, mellowness and sweetness supplied than in Mme. ROSA'S past operatic efforts, and the familiar smoothness, breadth and nobleness of style seemed to have gained something more of grace and splendor. In BEETHOVEN'S scena and recitative 'Ah Perfido!' the grandest and strongest points in the great artist's method were displayed, and the intense and contrasting phases of feeling in that wonderful composition were interpreted with fine dramatic emphasis and discretion. In the second part Mme. ROSA gave an exceedingly pretty and taking little song by PALADILHE, called 'Le Mandolinata,' which has attained great popularity in London—a song full of suggestions of tinkling guitars and lustrous dark eyes, and all the lazy, pleasure-loving romance of Spain. In response to an encore, Mme. ROSA sang the ballad of 'Katy's Letter' in her own almost inimitable style, and with such fresh and lively naïveté that it seemed quite unacknowled. Finally, in answer to a persistent recall, which was as ill mannered as it was well meant, Mme. ROSA gave 'Comin' Through the Rye.'".....Mrs. HELEN SECOMB, Mr. ALBERTO LAURENCE, who, we are told, "with his fine and effective baritone, added much to the success of the concert," and Signor CARLO PATTI, took part in the same entertainment.....Mrs. F. S. CHANFRAU has set out upon a starring tour, and she acted at the Buffalo Academy of Music, on Monday, in a new play called "Christie Johnstone," and written by Mr. C. W TAYLEURE. The Buffalo papers speak of Mrs. CHANFRAU'S acting with the strongest praise and Mr. TAYLEURE'S task—a dramatization from Mr. CHARLES READE'S story—calls from the Commercial Advertiser the commendation following: "Mr. TAYLEURE had a good, and, at the same time, a very difficult subject to work up. Upon the whole, Christie Johnstone may be regarded as one of the best, and it is certainly the purest and noblest of CHARLES READE'S novels. But, while the novelist may continue to tell a story in a way that captivates every intelligent reader, it by no means follows that his story can be converted into the plot of an exciting play; that his prominent characters can be made interesting on the stage, or that his glowing pen-pictures and descriptions can be converted into the thrilling scenes of a drama. Many a capitally told and powerfully written story would make a wretchedly thin and lame piece for the edification of the theatre-goers. In adapting Christie Johnstone, Mr. TAYLEURE has been singularly successful. He has woven into his drama almost everything that was worth saving in the novel. All the favorite characters have been retained, the author's rich and glowing language is preserved, the moral that READE desired to present is enforced, while the chapters in the book that abound with beautiful imagery, tender sentiment, burning passion and thrilling adventure, have been made the base of the striking and telling scenes of the drama. Finally, Mr. TAYLEURE has succeeded in exciting the mind, stimulating the intellect, and pleasing the eye of an audience, without sacrificing any more than was unavoidable of the harmony, beauty and pathos of the work which furnishes him with the plot."

.....Of a new play at the Boston Museum, the Boston Traveller writes thus: "While we are pleased to see the new dramatic ventures brought out so well at the Museum, we can by no means commend them all as productions of the first class. There are exceptions to every rule, and EBERHARD H. DIXON'S three-act comedy 'Behind the Mask,' which received its first representation in this city (and we believe in the country) last night, is most assuredly one of these exceptions. The piece is positively a bad one, with hardly anything to favor it but the generally good acting of the Museum company. Its second act, which has a strong situation at its close, is fearfully suggestive of the rehearsal of Mr. Puff's tragedy in 'The Critic;' while its first and third acts, if we except a few sparkling lines, amount to about nothing."....The Old Union Theatre in San Francisco is now being demolished.....Mr. and Mrs. HEINE will be heard in the Boston popular concerts on Wednesday and Thursday!..

The Chicago Tribune's report of Mrs. D. P. BOWERS'S acting still at the California Theatre.....An exchange says: "They tell a good joke on JEFFERSON, the comedian. Eighteen months ago he came to Louisville and played Rip Van Winkle to crowded houses, in Masonic Temple, at double price a head. Thousands of people who never enter a theatre went to the Temple. JEFFERSON RIP VAN WINKLE'S picture is more in Louisville theatre. He requires the Opera-house management to secure Masonic Temple for his next appearance, which is delayed until next spring. Time vs. progress."

.....Mr. OLE BULL is represented to be suffering from a relapse, and his agent is now cancelling all future engagements.....Pike's Opera-house, in Cincinnati, is to open for the season on Monday. Mr. JEFFERSON being the "star."....Mr. LINGARD and his company acted in Portland, last week.....A Boston paper says: "Prince GEORGE GALITZIN, with his famous orchestra, composed of emancipated serfs whom he has freed from bondage, has sailed from Russia for the United States, and will give a series of concerts in the various cities during the Autumn and Winter. The Prince's father, it will be remembered, was the friend and patron of BEETHOVEN. The son has inherited all the enthusiasm of the father for music, and his knowledge and genius are remarkable. He has given many honors at the court and devoted himself exclusively to harmony. When he arrives with his troupe we shall hear something different from any music hitherto brought from the Old World to the New, and it will no doubt prove most interesting. Prince GALITZIN telegraphed to a gentleman in Boston a few days ago that he had passed on his voyage across the Atlantic." "Elfie" was acted at the Boston theatre throughout last week. Monday, Miss LYDIA THOMPSON will appear there.....Mr. DOMINICK MURRAY acted part of last week at the Rochester Opera-house, and the remainder of the same period was filled by Miss JANE GEORGE and her company.....Mr. and Mrs. SMITH and Mr. BEN DE BAR were performing together at DeBar's Opera-house, in St. Louis, last week. The Olympic, in the same city, "Elfie," with Miss LILLY ELDRIDGE as the heroine, was on the bills.....Friday, Miss ADELAIDE PHILLIPS sang in Norwich, in Connecticut.....Mlle. MORLACCHI is playing at the Walnut-street Theatre in Baltimore.....W. S. GILBERT'S poetical drama of "The Palace of Truth" is about to be acted at the Boston Museum.....The Wyndham Comedy Company was last week in Indianapolis.....Mr. LAWRENCE BARRETT acted last week in Hartford.....Mr. COULDOCK is acting with Mrs. BOWERS in San Francisco.

Foreign Affairs.

"Hinko," an adaptation from a German play, had been brought out at the Queen's Theatre, in London. It was very enthusiastically received. A review of its merits shall be printed hereafter.....Mr. BUCKSTONE, the comedian, who is staying at Broadstairs, is said to be in very indifferent health.....Mr. WILKIE COLLINS is preparing a drama, to be produced as the Prince of Wales' Theatre on the withdrawal of "Caste," with a hush the theatre is to be reopened.....A burlesque on the "Three Musketeers," by Mr. FARNIE, is in preparation at the Strand.....The Royalty Theatre was to open on the 16th, under the management of Mr. MALLANDAINE, composer of "Love's Limits," "Haunted Mill," &c., for a season of 200 nights. Mr. PENLEASE will continue to act at the Grand Opera-House in Mr. DE WYZE'S drama of "Oofty Goofy," setting off that gentleman's "points" as nicely as possible, and Mr. GAYLER'S "Carl the Fiddler" will be given at Niblo's, with Mr. EMERY in the leading part. STATE POLITICS.

Action of County Conventions—Candidates Nominated and Delegates Elected.

UTICA, N. Y., Sept. 23.—GEORGE SHAW, Col. R. G. HAVORY, Gen. J. HILL, and JOHN R. PEECE, were today elected delegates to the Republican State Convention from the Fourth Assembly District of Oneida. GEORGE B. ANDERSON was sent to the Judicial District Convention. Resolutions commending Senator CONKLING and the reorganization in New-York City, ordered by the State Committee, were adopted. The Democrats of the First Assembly District held a Convention here today, and sent JAMES MCQUADE as delegate to the State Convention. Afterward the complexion of the Convention was changed by outside interference, and FRANCIS KERNAN was elected instead. The seat will probably be contested.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Sept. 2.—At the Convention in the Second Assembly District of Steuben County, held at Addison today, Hon. S. T. HOYT, Col. S. M. ALLEN; Gen. N. M. CRANE and Hon. HENRY SHERWOOD were selected as delegates to the Republican State Convention. Resolutions were adopted strongly indorsing the Administration of Gen. GRANT, and recommending his renomination. JAMES B. MURDOCK was nominated for member of Assembly. Delegates to the Senatorial Convention were selected in favor of the nomination of Col. G. F. HARRISON, of Steuben County, which insures his nomination, as the delegates of Chemung County are also in favor of his nomination. The delegates to the State Convention from the First Assembly District of Steuben County are JOHN H. BUTLER, JOHN W. DAVIS, CHARLES SETHOUR and D. B. BRYAN.

ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 23.—The Democrats today nominated Hon. CHARLES R. INGALLS for Judge of the Supreme Court of the Third Judicial District. The Democrats also nominated the following for Members of Assembly for this county: First District, W. D. MURPHY; Second District, JOHN W. SAYER; Third District, LAFAYETTE D. CASEY. At the Chemung County Republican Convention, at Norwich, ANDREW SHEPARDSON was nominated for Member of Assembly, H. G. BURDLE for Judge, and C. L. LENT for District Attorney.

FONDA, N. Y., Sept. 23.—The Democratic County Convention held today at Fonda, Montgomery County, unanimously selected HORACE VAN EVERA, of Fultonville, delegate to the Democratic State Convention on the issue of the opposition to GEORGE W. CHAPMAN'S renomination. H. B. WALDRON, JOHN B. HASLEY, TEN EYCK H. FONDA, HENRY WHYLAND and DANIEL SEAMEN were elected as delegates to the Senatorial Convention, and HENRY B. CUSHNEY, delegate to the Judicial Convention.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 23.—At the Republican County Convention, held here today, JAS. H. KELLY was nominated for Senator, JEROME FULLER for County Judge, GEORGE RAINES for District-Attorney, and CHAS. W. DEAN STUART for Surrogate. Entire harmony and the utmost enthusiasm prevailed.

THE SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS.

Gen. Wade Hampton Advises that They Refrain from Sending Delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

The following letter, addressed by Gen. HAMPTON to the editor of the Southern Home, is published in that paper in its issue of the 19th:

COLUMBIA, Sept. 9, 1871.

MY DEAR SIR: The Southern Home of the 6th instant, containing your editorial on the policy to be pursued by the Southern States in reference to the next National Democratic Convention, reached me a day or two ago, and along with it the letter in which you were kind enough to ask my opinion on this question. Though I cannot flatter myself that any opinion I may entertain can have the weight to your partiality might induce you to suppose, I shall most cheerfully comply with the request contained in your letter, because it is only by consultation and discussion among ourselves that we can hope to act judiciously and harmoniously.

It would perhaps be sufficient to say that I concur fully in the views you have expressed, as to the impropriety of the South taking any part in the approaching Convention; but, in deference to your wishes, I will briefly state the reasons which have induced this conviction in my mind.

1. The Southern delegates in a National Convention could exercise no influence in shaping the policy, planking up the issues, or making the candidates for the next contest, without seriously injuring the prospect of a Democratic triumph. That this would inevitably be the case, is proven by the result of the last Democratic Convention, where the very presence of Southerners was used to prejudice the action and to defeat the candidates of our party.

2. If the Southern delegates should not with propriety exert any influence in the Convention, while their mere attendance in it might result in infinite mischief to the Democratic Party, it is surely the part of wisdom to refrain from participating in the deliberations of the Convention.

3. The Northern Democracy will have to bear the burden of the fight in the next Presidential contest, and it is only right that they should choose the field and select the standard-bearers.

These, as I said, are the reasons in connection with those you have already ably advanced, that have convinced me that our true policy is to abstain altogether from all participation in the next National Democratic Convention. Of course, in pursuing this policy we should take care to have our conduct and motives fully understood by our Northern friends. We should say to them that we are actuated solely by the desire to promote the success of Democratic principles and Democratic candidates; that we wish to leave them free to act as the best interests of our party demand; and that we pledge them in the contest all the aid we can give, only asking them to give us a good platform, and as acceptable candidates as they can. When the platform is announced, and the candidates selected, the Democracy of the South can ratify the action of the National Convention, and they can use every effort in their power to secure a victory. Much on its success depends the existence of the Southern States.

If our people concur in this policy, arrangements should be made in each State to carry it out fully and effectually. Should they not concur, we must, in any event, act in perfect accord and with entire harmony.

Too much is at stake for us to differ among ourselves, and I for one am willing to yield my own opinions for the success of any plan which will tend to save the South from ruin.

I am very respectfully and truly yours,

WADE HAMPTON.

To Gen. D. H. HILL.

GEN. JOHN L. BEVERIDGE.

The Republican Candidate in Illinois for Congressman at Large.

The life of Gen. JOHN L. BEVERIDGE, the Republican candidate for Congressman at Large from Illinois, is thus briefly sketched by the Chicago Evening Journal:

"Gen. JOHN L. BEVERIDGE, the next Congressman at Large from the State of Illinois, is a genial gentleman, who has long been a resident of this county. His public services, which he has always discharged with the entire approbation of the community, have made him as popular as he is widely known. The General was born in Washington County, New-York, in 1824. He came to Illinois in 1836 and settled in DeKalb County, where he is still remembered with warm feelings of friendship. He passed several years in Tennessee, and during his residence in that State applied himself to the study of the law, and was admitted to practice. In 1855 he came to this city and established himself at the bar. Since that time he has been a resident of the city or its suburbs. When the rebellion had showed its gigantic strength in the first year of the war Mr. BEVERIDGE threw up his professional engagements and enlisted in the service of the United States. In the Fall of 1861 he was commissioned Major of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, and until November, 1862, he performed gallant and meritorious service with his regiment in the Army of the Potomac. In the Winter of 1862-64 he returned to Chicago and organized the Seventeenth Illinois Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Colonel. The regiment was assigned to the Department of the Missouri, when Col. BEVERIDGE'S prompt and skilful performance of duty was recognized by his appointment as a Brigadier-General. He remained in service until February, 1866, when he returned to this county with the intention of resuming the practice of the law. The people of Cook County, appreciating his gallant services as a soldier and his personal worth as a citizen, elected him Sheriff in the Fall of 1866, and again in the Fall of 1870 they returned him to Springfield, as Senator of the Twenty-fifth District. For nearly a decade of years, Gen. BEVERIDGE has performed important public duties, and whether in his office as Sheriff, in the field as a soldier, or in the Senate as a legislator, he has acted with entire acceptability to those by whom he has been clothed with these important trusts."

CARL SCHURZ.

Letter to Him from Confederate Soldiers—His Reply.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 23.—The speech delivered by Hon. CARL SCHURZ, of Missouri, on Wednesday, has created a profound impression in political circles. The most significant incident connected with it is the following letter formally addressed to Senator SCHURZ, and signed by several hundred Confederate soldiers, embracing every grade and rank of the late rebel service, from privates and non-commissioned officers up to Major-Generals. The signers, generally, are representative men of influence in the community:

"NASHVILLE, Sept. 21, 1871.

Hon. Carl Schurz:

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, formerly Confederate soldiers, wish to express to you our high regard for yourself, and our profound regard and admiration of the unselfish, non-partisan, cultured and patriotic address delivered by you in this city. We admire the manly, independent spirit which refuses obedience to party, when in conflict with one's convictions of duty and right. We pledge you that we are not partisans; that we have a faith that no words can express in the sublime significance of the mission and destiny of the American Republic; that we honor the National flag as the assured herald of that day when the races of men of all ranks and conditions will be crowned and delivered from all species of political and social thraldom. We wish to turn our backs on all sectional animosities and all parties groping in the moonlight of the past; and to ally ourselves with any party that will be animated with the spirit of civil and religious toleration, and broad and elevated patriotism, not bounded by State lines, but inspired with an abiding faith in the genius of free institutions."

SENATOR SCHURZ'S REPLY.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 23.—The following is Senator SCHURZ'S reply to the Ex-Confederate soldiers' letter:

NASHVILLE HOUSE, NASHVILLE, Sept. 23.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your letter, and, without affectation, I may say that I cannot find words strong enough to describe the joy it has given me. Spontaneous expressions of such sentiments as your letter contains, coming from you as late soldiers of the Confederate Army, may well be called an event of great significance in the history of our days. When your former comrades, as well as you do now, rally around the flag of the American Republic as the symbol of universal freedom, equal rights and constitutional government; when they declare that they will turn their backs upon all parties groping in the moonlight of the past, and denounce that partisan spirit which is so apt to obscure the human reason and blunt the best impulses of the human heart; when they once more fully recognize the identity of their true interests with those of every part of their country, then every patriotic citizen will feel that the regeneration of the South is certain to be accomplished by her own people. If there is still lurking here and there a spirit which keeps alive heritages of animosity and distrust, and which, by means of social proscription or intimidation or violence strives to impede the development of free public opinion, you can render it harmless by your influence and example. If there are disturbances of the peace and order of society occurring, calculated to produce the impression that the security and rights of citizens can be sufficiently protected only by the interference of the General Government, in your local concerns you can dispel that impression by devoting your energies to the enforcement of the laws, thereby proving the capacity of local self-government to accomplish its legitimate ends. Here, as well as elsewhere, if there is still an apprehension as to a secret desire to subvert the logical and legitimate result of the war by reactionary movements, you will remove the apprehension by demonstrating that the young South has risen above old prejudices and obsolete aspirations, and is determined to build up again the prosperity and power of those States on a basis in harmony with the progressive spirit of the age. Men of courage and convictions like you will do nothing by halves; they will not look back when they have put their hands to the plow, and I assure you that your efforts will have the sincerest appreciation, hearty applause, and energetic support of every true friend of liberty and free institutions. Your rights will be safe in the security of the rights of all; your power will be strong in the restored brotherhood of all Americans, and the Republic will be proud of all its children.

Yours, &c., CARL SCHURZ.

THE SITUATION IN UTAH.

The Struggle Between the Federal and Mormon Officials—Legal Contests and Penal Commitments.

Correspondence of the Sacramento Union.

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 11, 1871.

The most prolific place for legal wrangles, considering the extent of the population, in the United States at present, is unquestionably Salt Lake City. It is a struggle between the Federal officials and the Territorial officials, carried on unintermittingly, each point being contested, each inch of ground disputed, and law and authority rendered void by setting peremptorily at precedents and authorities to sustain every position taken by either side. The Territorial officials are accused of acting without due legal warrant and overstepping any legitimate power which they might possess; and the Federal officials are accused of overriding law and pursuing an anti-republican and despotic course. It is not my province to take sides with either party, and although in the discussion I may find myself a mere chronicler to state facts from which the public may draw their own inferences. One thing seems very plain to a disinterested spectator: that polygamy is not so much the object aimed at as breaking the power of the Mormon officials and wresting authority from them.

The latest bone of contention has been the custodianship of one KILPOYLE, a Territorial convict, under a life sentence of imprisonment for homicide. United States Marshal PATRICK having taken possession of the Penitentiary as United States property, under act of Congress Jan. 10, 1871, and by instructions from the former General AKERMAN, demanded possession of the Territorial convicts in pursuance of an agreement made between himself and Gov. WOODS that he should take charge of and board the Territorial convicts for $1 50 per day. ROCKWOOD, Warden of the Penitentiary, after being relieved of the charge of that building, refused to give up the convicts without an order of Court; and MCCARTER, then City Marshal, refused to open the City prison, where KILPOYLE was retained, without an order from ROCKWOOD. Both were held to answer to the charge of resisting the United States Marshal, and a strong array of legal ability was enlisted into requisition. For the prosecution were, R. N. BANCROFT, acting Prosecuting Attorney; G. R. MAXWELL, Register of the Land Office, and Judge MORGAN. For the defense, T. FITCH, Ex-Congressman; S. A. MANN, formerly Secretary and Acting Governor of this Territory; E. D. HOGE, formerly Associate Justice of Utah, and C. BLOOD, a Mormon lawyer, and at a late time Chief Justice of the Territory. The principal points made were, by the prosecution: That the mittimus committing the prisoner was of public record, and was an order of Court, which gave the prisoner into the charge of the custodian of the Penitentiary; that the law permitted Territorial convicts to be kept in the Penitentiary on an agreement to pay for keeping; that between the United States Marshal and a proper Territorial authority; that Gov. WOODS was the proper authority and had made such agreement; and that resisting his order to PATRICK, pursuant to that agreement and the mittimus, held to be an order of Court, was resisting the United States Marshal. By the defense: That the law of January 10, 1871, and the instructions of the Attorney-General gave the Territory the option of accepting or refusing to have Territorial convicts kept in the Penitentiary; that it could not be otherwise, for Congress could not constitutionally pass a law appropriating money out of the funds of Territorial treasury, which a law compelling Territories to keep and pay for their prisoners in a United States prison would be; that Gov. WOODS had no power by law to make a contract which would bind the Territory to pay money—a power vested only in the Legislative Assembly; that no one can have that power until the Legislature confers it; and that the Territories do not keep prisoners, but to the custody of Territorial convicts until such authority to make a contract for keeping is thus conferred, and such contract legally made. The Court ruled that PATRICK had the right to the custody of the prisoner, and held the defendants in $1,000 each for trial, for resisting a United States officer.

The excitement in the community is at a number of these cases in a similar condition of affairs now. Some seven or eight men are under bonds for a year past for meeting in military parade, contrary to Gov. SHAFFER'S proclamation prohibiting such displays. About twenty are held under bonds a still longer time, on the charge of riot, for breaking up a liquor establishment under warrant from an Aldermanic Court in the city, to suppress it as a nuisance for refusing to pay licenses; and in these and some other cases the question is as to the power of the Territorial and municipal authorities. A final decision by the Supreme Court of the United States is much to be desired, for it would set the matter at rest with regard to the doubtful appellate and jurisdictional points, which have so injurious effect upon the Territory and its best interests. Each side expresses itself satisfied that it would be sustained by the highest Court in the country; but each side evinces considerable caution in bringing these conflicting opinions to the final test.

CUNDURANGO.

The wonderful remedy for cancer, syphilis, scrofula, ulcerous and other blood diseases.

DR. P. T. KEENE having just returned from Ecuador and brought with him a quantity of the genuine cundurango bark, secured through the official recommendation and assistance of His Excellency the President of Ecuador and the Government of that Republic, we are prepared to fill orders for it to a limited extent, and at a moderate price, at which the cost of the first very small supply compelled its to charge.

Spurious articles are now advertised and sold as cundurango. We have, at considerable expense, by the co-operation of the Government of Ecuador, Minister, the province where the plant grows, so directed the channel of our supply as to insure that none but the genuine shall be sold by us, and we particularly call the attention of the public for their protection, to this fact.

OFFICE LAKE SHORE AND MICHIGAN SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, CLEVELAND, Sept. 14, 1871.

TO THE HOLDERS OF THE COMMON stock of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway Company: Notice is hereby given, that this Company offers to the holders of the common stock of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway Company, fourteen Million dollars of the bonds of the Company, hereinafter described, in payment of the rents of the Cleveland and Toledo Railroad, for the term of the lease of said road to this Company, taken under the provisions of its charter, at a meeting of the stockholders held at the city of Cleveland, Ohio, on the 27th day of July, 1871.

Each subscription of the common stock will be entitled to forty per cent. of the par of the stock held by him, upon the payment of thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the par of the stock subscribed for, on the 1st day of November next; the further sum of ten per cent. of the par thereof on the 1st day of January, 1872, and the remainder of said forty per cent. on the 1st day of March, 1872, on the stock subscribed for.

Notice of the final instalments will be given pursuant to the 1st day of December next, will be given in the daily papers published in the City of New-York and in a newspaper published in the City of Boston, and in a newspaper published in the City of Cleveland, at least thirty days before the day on which payment is required.

The whole of said instalments will be called for on or before the 1st day of March, 1872.

If payment of said stock be made in accordance with any calls which may be made, all rights to such stock would cease and the stock sold with the dividends on the same forfeited.

Scrip certificates will be issued for the payment of the first instalment (called for Nov. 1), payments of subsequent calls will, as the case may be, from time to time be indorsed upon the scrip certificate.

Each scrip certificate will be transferable on the books of the Company.

On payment of the thirty-three and one-third per cent certificates for full-paid stock will be issued upon the surrender of the scrip certificates therefor.

Dividends, upon the sum of the instalments actually paid in, will be declared, payable at the same rate and time as upon the full stock.

Payments of the calls are to be made at the office of the Union Trust Company of New-York, and a presentation at the stock certificates will be required, to the end that the issue of the scrip certificates may be indorsed thereon.

The stock transfer-books will be opened on Monday, the 25th day of September inst., and will be closed on Saturday, the 7th day of October next.

SOUTH CAROLINA RAILROAD COMPANY
7 PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.
Principal due 1st January, 1890, and coupons payable in New-York 1st January and 1st July.

These bonds, sterling Schedule of payments at a date 6 months after the 1st of January, 1872, in which Henry Gourdin, H. P. Walker and James M. Calder are named trustees, having the only mortgage lien on the railway and rolling stock of the corporation, and upon all of its bonds made in connection with the sterling bonds amounting to $410,000 sterling, being the amount issued in United States currency to about $2,100,000, or less than $13,000 per mile, the length of railway being 163 miles.

The gross receipts of the Company for 1870 amounted to $1,400,000 in currency; operating expenses and renewals to $1,000,000, leaving a profit of $400,244 71, or about $2,500 per mile, which is about 19 per cent. of the amount required for the interest on the entire issue of bonds, $2,100,000.

The South Carolina Railway is one of the earliest built railways in the United States; its affairs have been managed with care and fidelity, and the integrity and the present condition of the property is that of complete restoration. We recommend to investors its Mortgage Bonds, with the assurance of their being a first-class security.

The above described bonds are offered for sale by the undersigned at 87½ per cent.

THE HARBOR OBSTRUCTIONS.

Inspection of Gen. Newton's Operations by the Secretary of War and Gen. Sherman—Description of the Tunneling and Blasting Operations.

Complete surveys of New-York Harbor have been made at different periods, as is well-known, with the object of removing the obstructions to navigation, by Admiralty DAVIS and DAVIS, Commodore CRAVEN and the present able and successful topographical engineer, Gen. JOHN NEWTON, of the United States Army. In September, 1869, experimental blasts were made by Gen. NEWTON, which proved to him beyond a doubt that the work he had undertaken, though a task of immense magnitude, could be accomplished, and at a comparatively trifling cost to the Government. Last May Gen. NEWTON commenced work with his steam-drills on the dangerous rocks in mid-stream, between Governor's Island and the Battery, known as Diamond Reef. After laboring assiduously for over five weeks and making repeated blasts between the 2d and 20 yards square of the reef were blown away. Surveys were made of these blasts, which disclosed at the bottom of the river a space of crushed rock, innumerable detached boulders and huge hillocks of sand lying around, and over which was once Diamond Reef. A contract was soon made to have the débris removed, a work which has almost been finished, and which has demonstrated the fact that no additional blasts will be required, and that the elevation of Diamond Reef is no more. Soon after the work of the drills upon Diamond Reef was concluded the drill sloops were securely moored over Consolas Reef, and immediately commenced operations. The number of acres yards of rock to be removed at Consolas Reef is roughly estimated at over 6,000, and much of this has already been blasted out by Gen. NEWTON's indefatigable workmen. Besides at Consolas, Gen. Newton's drills are now at work on the Shell Drake, Way's Reef, Hoss Rock, Pot Rock, at the Hell Gate, or Horse Gap, at the old Dutch navigation known as Hell at Willett's Point. The operations at the Hell Gate are the most important and interesting. The Hell Gate, as every New-Yorker knows, is a narrow, rocky passage in the East River, and in the old Knickerbocker times its raging current was the terror of the Dutch navigators, and their heavy and unwieldy craft. Of late years many improvements have been effected by blasting away the surface rock and the most salient points of the largest ridges; but early since August, 1868, has the United States Government commenced to deal with the dangers of Hell Gate in a measure corresponding with their importance. The operations undertaken by Gen. NEWTON at Willett's Point, in the Hell Gate, involve the solution of an important problem of engineering as regards the most effective and economical process of submarine blasting. The system operated employed at Hallett's Point is entirely different from the manner in which the work of removing the obstructions has been accomplished at Diamond and Consolas Reefs, and is what is termed, technically, tunnel blasting. At Hallett's Point, in August, 1868, a coffer-dam was commenced under the superintendency of Gen. NEWTON, and completed in October. The dam is an irregular polygon in shape, having a circumference of 450 feet and a mean interior diameter of about 150 feet. The depth between high and low water marks. The enclosure of the shaft immediately followed the construction of the coffer-dam, and during the Spring of 1870, the shaft was sunk to the depth of twenty-two feet below low water. The theory of the mining operations contemplates the removal of a certain portion of rock to be excavated with safety powders to the first explosion, the result of which will be the sinking of the remaining mass into the deep pit excavated for its reception. The mass of rock remaining for the first explosion will be supported by piers, each of which will be charged with nitro-glycerine. These piers are simply a portion of the solid rock left standing. From the bottom of the shaft tunnels are driven in all directions and are ten in number. Each of the tunnels extends from 160 feet to 320 feet outward and are all connected together by cross galleries at intervals of twenty-five feet. The tunnels were begun toward the close of July, 1870, the shaft being at the same time sunk to a little nearly forty feet below low water mark. The tunneling is readily an object of a great deal of interest, as much from the novelty as from any other feature. They are of various cross-sections, some over twenty feet in height, and varying in width from ten to fifteen feet. The process of blasting by the improved method adopted and invented by Gen. NEWTON is well worth a description, and it is as follows: "The apparatus designed for drilling the rock in submarine blasting is composed of the chief portions of a water-tight iron casing, in the form of a depressed semi-spheroid, seven feet in diameter. It has three solid steel feet, by which its stability at the rock is secured. Rising from the upper part of the casing is a conical wrought-iron frame, supporting the upper end of the drill-shaft by means of two parallel rods entering into sockets in a cast ring at the top of the frame. The drill-shaft passes up through the centre of the frame, and is connected with a bit one and a half inches in diameter, having imbedded in the face nine steel diamonds, and rotating at the rate of from 300 to 400 revolutions per minute, advancing at the rate of from one to one and a half inches in the same time. The feed is caused by a differential gearing, which steadily operates to advance the drill into the rock, the drill-frame working in ways by which it is connected with the bit through a small rubber hose. The water-tight chamber of the machine contains two cylinders working at right angles to each other, with a horizontal stroke. As soon as the hole is completely drilled, and also when the drill-shaft is withdrawn from the rock, intermittent jets of air are given by a magnetic valve, which is actuated upon by a double wire-cord, insulated from each other, and passing down one of the parallel rods or tubes upon which the steam-head is fixed. This drill weighs nearly five tons. It is worked from a wrecking tug, with a derrick, by means of steam supplied from the boiler of the tug. To prevent this steam from being condensed in its passage through the pipe to the engine, it is conveyed in a hose surrounded by another pipe, through which the exhaust steam passes. The rock at Hallett's Point is that known as the bastard granite, on which the drill has been satisfactorily tested. After a number of holes are drilled over a certain space, a dress descends and charges them with cartridges of nitro-glycerine, which are exploded in the usual manner. The fragments are raised by "automatic grapnels." The rounding off at Hallett's Point will be accompanied and followed by the obliteration of other rocks in the channel, and in a short time the terrors of Hell Gate will be among the things of the past.

At 10 o'clock yesterday morning the steamer Henry Smith left the foot of Twenty-third-street, on East River, with Generals SHERMAN, Belknap, Gen. Sherman, Gen. Newton, Gen. McDowell, Gen. Humphries, Gen. Wallace, Gen. Ingalls, Col. Barry, and several other distinguished officers to inspect the work upon the rock at Hallett's Point, Willett's Point. Arriving at Hallett's Point experiments were made with the combustibles employed in the mining operations. Gun-cotton, nitro-glycerine, and SIX different kinds of torpedoes were exploded on shore. The torpedoes were afterwards exploded at depths varying from eight to seventy feet, and displayed the most powerful explosive force. The experiments were conducted under the immediate supervision of Gen. HENRY ABBOTT, commanding the battalion of engineers at Willett's Point. At Hallett's Point the entire party, including Secretary BELKNAP and Gen. SHERMAN, descended the shaft and explored the immense caverns which Gen. Newton's drills and nitro-glycerine have produced. Arriving at Fort Schuyler, the party were received with a salute. After the review of the troops a collation was served at the commandant's quarters. The head of the Fifth Artillery, from Fort Hamilton, accompanied the steamer, and played some excellent music. It was after 6 o'clock last evening when the Henry Smith returned to the City. Both the Secretary of War and Gen. SHERMAN expressed highly gratified with the result of their inspections, and complimented both Gen. NEWTON and ABBOTT upon the stupendous work which they had already accomplished.

BISSERT's Maggie and mate were ruled out, one of the horses having been changed between the heats. The third race was won by Wild Irishman in 2:42¾, 2:39, 2:37, and the fourth race, running horses, was won by JOHN BROUGHAM's c. Jack, in three straight heats. Time—1:37¾, 2:31, 2:32. The Fair, which has been unusually successful, was brought to a close last evening.

Seizure of Smuggled Diamonds at a Rio Janeiro Steamship.

Some time ago B. F. MOORE, a dealer in diamonds at No. 49 Maiden-lane, was arrested on a charge of smuggling diamonds, and gave $50,000 bail for an examination. Col. WHITLEY believed that MOORE, notwithstanding his arrest, was still continuing his smuggling operations, and a short time ago intercepted a letter to MOORE containing a private invoice of diamonds which had just arrived by steamer from Rio Janeiro. One of WHITLEY's detectives took the invoice and went to the steamer, and, by personating MOORE and showing the likeness of a man named VAN DUSEN, who, while acting as a pretended agent for Wood's Sewing-Machine Company, at Rio Janeiro, had shipped diamonds at various times to MOORE, obtained possession of the diamonds. On Friday, Col. WHITLEY entered MOORE's place just after the arrival, and, seizing on the mails which contained the diamonds, arrested MOORE. Subsequently Secretary BOUTWELL, Solicitor PHELPS, Special Agent HARRIS, and Inspector WHITLEY examined and inspected the large diamonds, which had come by the steamer. Col. WHITLEY took the invoice to the steamer and showed the diamonds which he had seized to the persons from whom they were purchased. The total value of all the diamonds seized is about $40,000. The diamonds on board the Mercedes have been seized, and it was being certain that the whole of the diamonds will be found in the transaction.

THE CLUB OF THE PERIOD.

Schools of Wrestling, Fencing, and Boxing—The Rowing Clubs and the Yacht Clubs—Pedestrianism—Cricket—Base Ball—Athletic Sports—Shops.

Rings, caucuses, and clubs are, in a measure, old institutions. John have been "put up" by successive generations. Since Joseph had his "loving cup" consumed in Benjamin's carpet-bag, conspirators have met and plotted for the furtherance of dynasties or the mere interests of revenge and potables from time immemorial; but it has been reserved for this latter half of the nineteenth century to develop the club idea to something like perfection. A "Clubbable" man of Johnson's time, so much admired and highly appreciated by that ponderous lexicographer, met in dingy taverns, fenced off from the vulgar herd of outside customers by their own dutility alone. Their decorum had a charm to gild their homely surroundings, and wit and wisdom to be posthumously cherished by an enlightened world, and handed in their own day by "the town." Those sages of the golden age of literature would have been very much astonished had they foreseen the present prevalence of their very exclusive pet enjoyment, or anticipated the glories in upholstery and general luxury, of the great social clubs of the day. America is pre-eminently the country of clubs. General intelligence, comparatively easy circumstances, universal suffrage, and a cultivated sense of the virtues of self-advertisement, hold all men, tickled by the pleasant vice for which Satan fell, to congregate, to express their views and sentiments about all things in or under heaven, and to hardly get into training for an universal race to some pinnacle of personal ambition. Hence clubs. There are clubs social and clubs musical, artistic clubs and clubs or guilds of butchers, painters, loungeboremen and cabinet-makers. From tin Kers of Britloes to tinkers of constitutions, the ecessity of belonging to one or more clubs is recognized as inevitable. Pensus clubs and knownothing clubs, "ancient" orders of high shoulders and shoulder-hitters, or for the abolition of all men who can afford to keep their carriages, even their hospitable doors, but whatever may be the objects or weakness or idiosyncrasy of any club, it is sure to be more or less swearing to the verse of the all-absorbing guff of politics. Some clubs are professedly political, pure and simple. All, with very very few exceptions, just to prove the rule, are political in addition to their acknowledged functions. And of all clubs, the most interesting to consider, especially at this juncture, when the elections are drawing nigh, and parties beat up recruits, are certainly the political clubs, and of these instruction may be gained by noting the tactics of the little fellows. To appreciate the majesty of the bejewelled aristocrats of the Blossom, Americus, or Manhattan Clubs, it is necessary to study the phases of the lower depths they sprung from; one would cease to wonder then at the treachery, double-dealing and ignorance, too many of these display where their veneering may happen to be chipped. To paraphrase BULWER, with many of the Scotch, we would say the Devil is Low. Let us turn to the early haunts of this rapacious race, and examine how they are educated.

In every Ward are organized numerous small political clubs, named generally after some notorious professional politician, sometimes in some disreputable faction interest, such as "The Tweedledee and Tweedledum Independent Abolishing and Debt-Repudiating Hod-carriers Association." Two or three evil spirits concoct the preliminaries in mysterious seclusion over bad gin and villainous cigars, gather unto themselves sundry spirits worse than themselves, enthrone themselves in smoke and reeking vapors of foul language, advertise and announce by cry of mouth and frothy pleasure the birth of the novelty and a place and time of meeting, settle among themselves who is to run for various club positions, frame resolutions and provisional constitutions and by-laws. The great unwashed assemble. The idle and the disgraced, corner loafers, old played-out politicians, bartenders and rising young liquor-store proprietors, scenting the prey, "solid" men from the lower walks of life, who have earned money, but think it time to make a splurge, and befledged youngsters, caressing incipient mustaches, scaplocks, and callow aspirations for political distinction, all more or less greedy for coveted honeurs, swell the noisy, enthusiastic crowd. Speechifying is in order, harmony prevails, everything out and dried is adopted nem. con., rolls are signed and initiation fees put down. The Ring, for of course there must be a ring even at this early stage, as a privilege, don't pay any subscription for the expensive furniture, rooms and fixings. Accredited officers are elected, mutual admiration holds sway, and the club is formed and addressed to the bar of the fortunate strychnine vender who happens to enjoy most popularity for the time. The others, disheartened, retire, bide their time. Every terrier has his day, and they know their turn will come sooner or later. Here the misled American of the new hordo pulls out his well-stored wallet, and ostentatiously sets the figurative wine-cask abroach, while the other officers, not to be outdone, emulate his worthy example. The bill gets full, so do the tillers in the bar-room of petty enjoyment, and "drinks all the flat" is toasted by those who would richly adorn the interior of other bars in Egyptian gloom. Happy are those patriots! The next day all the ruffians out of work, too lazy to seek it, or too well known to get it, invade the precincts of the last night's revelry, and stay there. They intend the club for its purpose, scraping up every dollar they could lay their hands on, and are determined to enjoy their rights. Eleemosynary drinks, and games at euchre interspersed with speechifyings as to the benefits to accrue to the club and themselves personally are interlarded with blasphemy and obscenity, and emphasized with copious libations of tobacco-juice on the long-suffering sawdust of the floor. If boxing-gloves or Indian clubs or other weighty dumb-bells are available, they straightway go for them, and make day and night hideous with the cumbrous frolicking they enjoy, while occasional quarrels and the erection of Mahomed rocks occupy a portion of their pleasant hours, and give them something to talk about when their wasted energies may be interested. The President strikes a "big thing" in the way of some contract, holds out hopes of discounts to a score of theseruffians, doesn't get them anything, plays them off one on another in mysterious tête-à-têtes, that so-and-so cannot be got for much a one at such a time, because of the jealousy of Thingamy; with honeyed words and confidential hints, "You know how it is yourself." The not over-anxious loafer, fat-headed while seeing through the trick, subsidized into his accompaniment of the headquarters, and plumes himself on the birth of the novelty and a place and time of meeting, settle among themselves who is to run for various club positions, frame resolutions and provisional constitutions and by-laws. The great unwashed assemble. The idle and the disgraced, corner loafers, old played-out politicians, bartenders and rising young liquor-store proprietors, scenting the prey, "solid" men from the lower walks of life, who have earned money, but think it time to make a splurge, and befledged youngsters, caressing incipient mustaches, scaplocks, and callow aspirations for political distinction, all more or less greedy for coveted honeurs, swell the noisy, enthusiastic crowd.
